IMPORTANT FROM EAST TENNESSEE

The Rebels Advancing upon Knoxville.

THE PLACE COMPLETELY INVESTED.

HEAVY SKIRMISHING YESTERDAY.

The Position Very Strongly Fortified.

THE REBEL FORCES UNDER LONGSTREET.

KNOXVILLE, Thursday, Nov. 17.

The enemy began skirmishing from their position on Kingston Road, at 10 this morning. Our advance alone, composed wholly of mounted infantry and cavalry, occupied the position, under command of Gen. SANDERS, and each man fought like a veteran. At noon the enemy opened with artillery at short range, their battery protected by a large house. BENJAMIN'S battery was the only one which replied, occupying the chief fortification, half a mile in front of and to the right of the town. A desperate charge was made by the enemy about 3 P. M. Our men were protected by rail barricades on the crest of the hill. Gen. SANDERS was severely wounded, and was borne from the field.

We yielded the position, and fell back about a third of a mile to a stronger one. We have lost about one hundred, one quarter of whom were killed. The enemy had completely invested the place, but Gen. BURNSIDE will defend it to the last man, and it is believed successfully. The troops are in the best spirits. Every important point is fortified, and confidence prevails that we shall whip the enemy out.

A MORE DETAILED ACCOUNT.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Tuesday, Nov. 17.

Gen. LONGSTREET, after crossing the Tennessee on Saturday morning, 14th inst., was attacked in the afternoon by Gen. BURNSIDE, who drove the advance guard back to within a mile of the river's edge by nightfall.

LONGSTREET crossed the remainder of his troops during the night, and on Sunday morning advanced in force.

Gen. BURNSIDE, finding it impossible to cope with him with the small force at his disposal, fell back to Lenoir, the rear guard skirmishing heavily with the enemy through the day.

Three desperate charges were made upon our positions during Sunday night, but they were handsomely repulsed.

On Monday morning Gen. BURNSIDE evacuated Lenoir, but owing to the energy with which the rebel pursuit was kept up, determined to give them a decided check, and accordingly came into line of battle at Campbell's Station, when a fight ensued, lasting from 10ste in the forenoon until dark. Our first position commanding the road from both sides, the infantry deployed in front of this, and were soon attacked by the enemy, who made several gallant charges, and finally succeeded, by outflanking our men, in driving them to the cover of the batteries, which now opened a terrific and destructive fire. The rebels retired before it, gave way, and eventually fell back to the river.

It was now three o'clock in the afternoon. The rebels showing a desire to renew the attack, and having brought three batteries to their assistance, Gen. BURNSIDE fell back to a more desirable position and again gave them battle. The contest continued, closing at nightfall, with our troops in possession of their own ground.

The object of the fight having been attained, and as the detention of the rebels had enabled our trains to get all in advance, our troops fell back during the night and early Tuesday morning reached Knoxville, where a great battle is expected to be fought to-morrow.

Yesterday the rebel advance guard attacked our outposts upon the Loudon and Clinton roads and heavy skirmishing continued all day.

This morning the attack was resumed when the fog which set in during the night had lifted. The rebels finding it impossible to drive our men with infantry, brought several guns into position, and poured in a flanking fire.

In the afternoon they brought forward a heavy force of infantry once more, and, after a brief skirmish, charged our position. A terrific hand to hand conflict occurred—both sabres and revolvers being used on both sides. Our men fought with the greatest gallantry; but at last were compelled to fall back about a third of a mile, to a strong line, which they hold to-night.

We have to regret the wounding of Gen. SANDERS and Capt. SIMS, of the cavalry, who commanded the outpost. His condition is critical. Lieut.-Col. SMITH, of the Twentieth Michigan, was killed at Campbell's Station. Our loss in that fight was between two and three hundred. Our loss to-day will not exceed one hundred and fifty.

Our men are in the best of spirits and perfectly confident of success to-morrow.

LATE FROM CHATTANOOGA.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

CHATTANOOGA, Monday, Nov. 16, 1863.

The stream of deserters from the enemy continues to increase. Among them are some of the Vicksburgh paroled prisoners, who are much exercised regarding their status. From information which they bring it is now rendered certain that LONGSTREET is operating against BURNSIDE in East Tennessee.

The weather for the past few days has been very fine, and the roads are in excellent condition.

REPORTS FROM REBEL SOURCES.

ATLANTA, Friday, Nov. 13.

Nothing from the front this morning. A party of Georgia State troops and Indians killed the notorious SAVAGE and thirty-four of his men, a short time since, on the line between Georgia and North Carolina.

A special to the Register, dated Sweet Water, Nov. 12, says: "The Federals have removed all their supplies to Knoxville for safety, and are living on half rations. Several deserters, recaptured, were executed here yesterday."

A special to the Intelligencer says: "Two Yankee officers who deserted and came into our lines, report that GRANT expects soon to assault Lookout. His army is on half rations.

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

Cavalry Skirmish at Germanna Ford—Great Scarcity of Contrabands—The Army Being Paid Off.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Nov. 19.

The intelligence received to-night from the Army of the Potomac is to the effect that a cavalry skirmish between 300 rebels and part of the [illegible] yesterday. [illegible] Rebellion. [illegible] the country and weather being favorable for such purposes.

Hundreds of contrabands could be profitably employed in the army as drivers, teamsters, &c. In one artillery brigade alone, a sufficient number of soldiers are employed as wagoners and teamsters, to man a six-gun battery, for want of negroes.

Yesterday evening some cannonading was heard in the direction of the Rapidan south of Culpepper, but no particulars had been received when the messenger this afternoon left the army.

No sutlers have yet been granted right of transportation for their stores to the army. A few occasionally succeed in passing goods, but they are liable to arrest and confiscation.

Paymasters are busily at work in the discharge of their duties in almost all, if not all, the army corps.

THE HEROES OF JULY..

A Solemn and Imposing Event.

Dedication of the National Cemetery at Gettysburgh.

IMMENSE NUMBERS OF VISITORS.

Oration by Hon. Edward Everett—Speeches of President Lincoln, Mr. Seward and Governor Seymour.

THE PROGRAMME SUCCESSFULLY CARRIED OUT.

The ceremonies attending the dedication of the National Cemetery commenced this morning by a grand military and civic display, under command of Maj.-Gen. COUCH. The line of march was taken up at 10 o'clock, and the procession marched through the principal streets to the Cemetery, where the military formed in line and saluted the President. At 11¼ the head of the procession arrived at the main stand. The President and members of the Cabinet, together with the chief military and civic dignitaries, took position on the stand. The President seated himself between Mr. SEWARD and Mr. EVERETT after a reception marked with the respect and perfect silence due to the solemnity of the occasion, every man in the immense gathering uncovering on his appearance.

The military were formed in line extending around the stand, the area between the stand and military being occupied by civilians, comprising about 15,000 people and including men, women and children. The attendance of ladies was quite large. The military escort comprised one squadron of cavalry, two batteries of artillery and a regiment of infantry, which constitutes the regular funeral escort of honor for the highest officer in the service.

After the performance of a funeral dirge, by BIGELOW, by the band, an eloquent prayer was delivered by Rev. Mr. STOCKTON, as follows:

O God, our Father, for the sake of the Son, our Saviour, inspire us with thy spirit, and sanctify us to the right fulfillment of the duties of this occasion. We come to dedicate this new historic centre as a National Cemetery. If all the Departments of the one Government thou hast ordained over our Union, and of the many Governments which Thou has subordinated to the Union be there represented; if all classes, relations and interests of our blended brotherhood of people stand severally and thoroughly apparent in Thy presence, we trust it is because Thou hast called us, that Thy blessing awaits us, and that Thy designs may be embodied in practical results of incalculable, imperishable good. And so with thy holy Apostle and with the Church in all lands and ages, we unite in the ascription: Blessed be God, even the Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of Moses, and the God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God. In emulation of all angels, in fellowship with all saints, and in sympathy with all sufferers, in remembrance of Thy works, in reverence of Thy ways and in accordance with Thy word, we love and magnify Thy infinite perfections, Thy creative glory, Thy redeeming grace, Thy providential goodness, and the progressive, richer and fairer development of thy supreme, universal and everlasting administration. In behalf of all humanity, whose ideal is divine, whose first memory is thy image lost, whose last hope is thy image restored; especially in behalf of our own nation, whose position is so peerless, whose mission is so sublime, and whose future is so attractive; we thank Thee for the unspeakable patience of thy compassion and for the exceeding greatness of thy loving kindness. In contemplation of Eden, Calvary and Heaven, of Christ in the God on the cross, and on the throne—nay, more—of Christ as coming again in all-subduing power and glory; we gratefully prolong our homage by this altar of sacrifice, on this field of deliverance, on this mount of consecration, within the fiery and bloody line of these mountains and rocks, looking back to the dark days of fear and of trembling, and the rapture of relief that came after, we multiply our thanksgivings and confess our obligations to renew and perfect our personal and social consecration to thy service and glory. O, had it not been for God! for our enemies, they came unresisted, multitudinous, mighty, flushed with victory and sure of success; they exulted on our mountains, they reveled in our valleys; they feasted, they rested, they slept, they awakened, they grew stronger, prouder and bolder every day; they spread abroad, they concentrated here; they looked beyond this horizon to the stores of wealth, to the haunts of pleasure and the seats of power in our Capital and chief cities; they prepared to cast the chain of Slavery around the form of freedom, and to bind life and death together forever. Their premature triumph was the mockery of God and man. One more victory, and all was theirs. But behind these hills was heard the feebler march of a smaller but still a pursuing host; onward they hurried, day and night, for their country and their God; footsore, wayworn, hungry, thirsty, faint, but not in heart; they came to dare all, to bear all, and to do all that is possible to heroes. At first they met the blast on the plain, and bent beforeit like trees; but then led by Thy hand to the hills, they took their stand on the these rocks, and remained as firm and immovable as they. In vain were they assaulted; all art, all violence, all desperation failed to dislodge them. Baffled, bruised, broken, their enemies retired and disappeared. Glory to God for this rescue! But, Oh! the slain, in the freshness and fullness of their young and manly life! with such sweet memories of father and mother, brother and sister, wife and children, maiden and friend, From the coasts beneath the Eastern star; from the shores of Northern lakes and rivers; from the flowers of the Western prairies; from the homes of the midway and the border, they came here to die for us and for mankind! Alas How little we can do for them! We come with the humility of prayer, with the pathetic eloquence of venerable wisdom, with the tender beauty of poetry, with the plaintive harmony of music, with the honest tribute of our Chief Magistrate, and with all this honorable attendances; but our best hope is in Thy blessings. O Lord, Our God, bless us. O, Our Father, bless the bereaved, whether absent or present. Bless our sick and wounded soldiers and sailors. Bless all our rulers and people. Bless our army and navy. Bless the efforts to suppress this rebellion, and bless all the associations of this day, and place, and scene, forever. As the trees are not dead, though their foliage is gone, so our heroes are not dead though their forms have fallen. In their proper personality they are all with thee, and the spirit of their example is here. It fills the air, it fills our hearts, and as long as time shall last it will hover in these skies and rest on these landscapes, and pilgrims of our own land and of all lands, will thrill with its inspiration, and increase and confirm their devotion to liberty, religion and God.

Mr. EVERETT then commenced the delivery of his oration, which was listened to with marked attention throughout. (The oration of Mr. EVERETT will be found on our second page.)

Although a heavy fog clouded the heavens in the morning during the procession, the sun broke out in all its brilliancy during the Rev. Mr. STOCKTON's prayer and shone upon the magnificent spectacle. The assemblage was of great magnitude, and was gathered within a circle of great extent around the stand, which was located on the highest point of ground on which the battle was fought. A long line of military surrounded the position taken by the immense multitude of people.

The Marshal took up a position on the left of the stand. Numerous flags and banners, suitably draped, were exhibited on the stand among the audience. The entire scene was one of grandeur due to the importance of the occasion. So quiet were the people that every word uttered by the orator of the day must have been heard by them all, notwithstanding the immensity of the concours.

Among the distinguished persons on the platform were the following: Governors Bradford, of Maryland; Curtin, of Pennsylvania; Morton, of Indiana; Seymour, of New-York; Parker, of New-Jersey, and Tod, of Ohio; Ex-Gov. Dennison, of Ohio; John Brough, Governor Elect, of Ohio; Charles Anderson, Lieutenant-Governor of Ohio; Major-Generals Schenck, Stahel, Doubleday, and Couch; Brigadier-General Gibbon; and Provost-Marshal-General Fry.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S ADDRESS.

The President then delivered the following dedicatory speech:

Fourscore and seven years ago our Fathers brought forth upon this Continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. (Applause.) Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We are met to dedicate a portion of it as the final resting-place of those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate. We cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. (Applause.) The world will little note nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. (Applause.) It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the refinished work that they have thus so far nobly carried on. (Applause.) It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that the dead shall not have died in vain; (applause) that the Nation shall under God have a new birth of freedom, and that Governments of the people, by the people and for the people, shall not perish from the earth. (Long continued applause.)

Three cheers were then given for the President and the Governors of the States.

After the delivery of the addresses, the dirge and the benediction closed the exercises, and the immense assemblage separated at about 4 o'clock.

About 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the Fifth New York regiment of heavy artillery, Col. MURRAY, was marched to the temporary residence of Gov. SEYMOUR, where they passed in review before the Governor, presenting a handsome spectacle. Upon the conclusion of this ceremony, which attracted quite a crowd of sight-seers, Gov. SEYMOUR presented a handsome silk regimental standard to the regiment, accompanying the gift with the following speech:

GOV. SEYMOUR'S SPEECH.

SOLDIERS OF NEW-YORK: We love our whole country, without reservation. But while we do so, it is not inconsistent with that perfect and generous loyalty to love and to be proud of our own State This day, when I took part in the celebration that was to consecrate yonder battle-field, while I felt as an American citizen, proud of my own country, and proud of the gallant services of her citizens, in every State, nevertheless my eye did involuntarily wander to that field where lie the glorious dead of our good and great State, and when I returned, to see marching before me your manly and sturdy columns, not knowing you belonged to New-York, my heart did quicken and my pulse tingle, to learn that you were acting commissions issued by myself; I am most proud and most happy that I have have this opportunity, on behalf of the merchants of the great commercial City of New-York, to present to you this glorious banner, which has been sent as a token of their confidence in your loyalty and your courage, and your fidelity in the hour of danger. Sergeant, I place these colors in your hands in the firm confidence that they will be borne through every field of triumph, of toil and of danger, in a way that will do honor to yourselves, to the great State which you represent, and the still greater country, to which we all belong. My God bless you as you serve your country in the distant field of danger We find in those glorious fields you left behind you are not indifferent to this conflict; are not indifferent to the welfare of the whole Union. I do not doubt, therefore, that when you shall return from your dangerous fields of duty, you shall bring back this standard to place among the archieves of our State with honorable mention of the services her sons have performed. I do not doubt that though it may perhaps be returned torn and stained, yet it will be still more glorious, and with glorious recollections clustering around it. In concluding these remarks, I ask in return of the men of New-York, to give three cheers for the Union of our country, and three cheers for the flag of our land.

Gen. SCHENCK followed in a short speech.

A subscription of $280 was made by the Marshals attending these ceremonies, to be devoted to the relief of the Richmond prisoners.

In the afternoon, the Lieutenant-Governor elect of Ohio, Col. ANDERSON, delivered an oration at the Presbyterian Church.

The President and party returned to Washington at 6 o'clock this evening, followed by the Governors' trains. Thousands of persons were gathered at the depot, anxiously awaiting transportation to their homes; but they will probably be confined to the meagre accommodations of Gettysburgh till to-morrow.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF.

ARRIVAL OF THE CREOLE FROM NEW-ORLEANS.

The Attack upon Gen. Washburn's Column.

Our Entire Loss Six Hundred and Seventy-seven.

The steamship Creole, Capt. THOMPSON, arrived yesterday morning from New-Orleans, bringing dates to the 10th inst. Further accounts from the Teche country concerning the attack on WASHBURN'S column represents our whole loss in killed and wounded and taken prisoners at 677. The Indiana Sixty-seventh was captured almost entire; the Sixtieth Indiana and Ohio Ninety-sixth lost largely. The rebel force was as five to one. We only excelled them in artillery, by means of which, at short range, it is thought, we killed a large number of the enemy. It is reported that the Thirteenth army corps, now in the Teche country, is ordered back to Memphis.

The attack was made by the enemy in force of 5,000 upon our rear guard, only 1,600 strong. The enemy captured two pieces of artillery, but one of them was subsequently retaken. The fight took place at Buzzard Prairie, on the east side of Bayou Teche.

Gen. PAICE was reported at Alexandria with 15,000 men, and for this reason, as well as the impossibility of getting supplies, it was deemed best to fall back.

Gens. THOMAS and WADSWORTH arrived in New-Orleans on the 10th inst.

THE DELAWARE ELECTION.

The Union Ticket Overwhelmingly Successful—Smithers, for Congress, Walked the Course.

WILMINGTON, Thursday, Nov. 19.

The election in this State passed off quietly. The Copperheads, seeing defeat staring them in the face, abandoned the contest. BROWN did not withdraw, but the leaders, knowing they would be compelled to proclaim themselves loyal men in order to vote, gave the key-note for the whole party to stay at home. SMITHERS walked the course. Newcastle County gives SMITHERS 4,014 votes, and BROWN 6 votes. In six Districts of Kent County, SMITHERS has 1,273 votes, BROWN none. In five Districts of Sussex County, SMITHERS has 644 votes, and BROWN 7 votes, showing a gain for SMITHERS over FISHER'S vote of last year in this county.

J. T. HEALD,
Chairman State Committee.

GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA.

Welcome to Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.

Demonstration at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

A GREAT SPEECH.

His Impressions of British Feeling Toward America.

An immense audience assembled at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, last evening, to welcome and hear the Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER. The meeting was under the auspices of the War Fund Committee, the entire proceeds to be devoted to the Sanitary Commission. Rev. Dr. STORRS made an eloquent address of welcome to Mr. BEECHER, who, on his appearance, was most enthusiastically greeted. When quiet was restored Mr. BEECHER spoke as follows:

MR. BEECHER'S ADDRESS.

I will not attempt to disguise the deep feeling with which your generous kindness, expressed in the words of my brother, affect me. I am more touched and more stirred by this sympathy than by all that I have seen and by all that I have experienced in the whole of my travel abroad; and I speak the simple truth, which has the witness in your hearts, that it is here in this city more than anywhere else that I desire to be so greeted. For as, when in England, it was my pride to be an American, so when I am in America, it is my pride to be a citizen of Brooklyn; and I accept your generous confidence, and this affecting testimony of it, in so far as it relates to me personally, with profound sensibility and with deep gratitude. I thank you; and yet should that be all supposed that this was meant for me in my simple individuality. I am myself the effect of American institutions; I am made by them and if I have done any service to the public worthy of your regard, I owe it to this very public and the institutions which enrich it the power to do it any service. And I am glad that it is so—so deep are my feelings of patriotism, so profoundly am I impressed with the grandeur of this latest and ripest development of civil life, that I am more than willing to be sunk myself if my decadence and disappearance could add anything to the glory of my country. I would fain be as the oil in the lamp that gives its life, that the light may be bright which consumes it. And that which is my feeling is your feeling, and I know I bear your sympathy with me in this simple and artless expression of my feelings to-night. I am glad that you asked me to be present; and I am proud that it shall go abroad that when I came back to America, having witnessed as I could in Europe for the truth of our cause, the first place to greet me was my own home, where I am best known. It is, indeed, a wreath which I shall wear none the less because it is invisible. I went abroad, as you know, simply as a private citizen. It was tauntingly asked me, on my arrival in England, why, in the very height and paroxysm of our national agony, I abandoned the field to go abroad. I did not answer, but I now do answer. I foresaw that the Autumn and the Winter would require labors even greater than any period previous, and the excitement and the excessive labors of the two and a half years, or three years preceding, had not destroyed my health nor destroyed my constitution; but certainly I was jaded, and I feared to go into the labor of the Autumn and Winter, which required the best powers of every man, without my full strength; and since I could do nothing in the Summer, I took that opportunity, upon the generous invitation of my own people, to go abroad and rest, that I might come back to labor more assiduously. Allow me to say that this generosity of my own dear people was a comfort to me everywhere, and that in Great Britain—not because I disesteemed their kindness or undervalued their hospitality, but because it was something that I cherished with a secret pride—I refused to received their hospitality or, in the remotest degree, compensation in any form. I said to them, my own people sent me abroad, and it is their pleasure that I shall stand upon them for support, and I will not take one penny from the hand of an Englishman. (Applause.) You will not misunderstand me; it was not because I disdained their kindness, but because I valued yours. It was also said that I had come abroad sent by our Government. That would have spoiled it all. I had no official character, and would not have had one. I went simply as a private citizen, and was there merely and purely as an American citizen. And when, unsought and, indeed, against my feelings, if not against my judgment, I entered upon the labor of the past few weeks of my sojourn in England, I assumed the responsibility, I cannot say with trembling, for I am not accustomed much to tremble; but I assumed the responsibility with the gravest sense of what it was. I have felt the inspiration of nationality often, but I never before was placed between two such great people, where I saw them both in prospective, both in their present relations and in their future. I never before felt so much as I felt all the time, waking or dreaming, night or day, what it was to stand and plead for the unity of these two great nations, for the sake of struggling mankind; and it was at once an excitement to me and a support. But, after all, I did not know how my countrymen would regard my efforts. If you had disapproved, I should have been sorry, that you disapproved, but not sorry for what I had done. I did the best I knew how to do, every time, everywhere disinterestedly, for the love I bear to the cause and to the principles which underlie it, and I had no word, could not have, from home whether my representations of policy, and of fact, and of history, and of the tendencies of things, would accord with yours, or whether I should not be caught up in the whirl of conflicting parties, my reasonings traversed, my arguments denied—not till I landed in Boston did I hear one whisper—and then I learned for the first time that my services had been accepted by my countrymen. (Applause.) But to-night I meet you, a citizen returned among his friends, profoundly thankful that the labor and the service which I attempted for the public good have the seal of their approbation. It is my purpose not to trespass any further upon your time in matters that are personal to myself. I know that you will not think me vain for what I have said, and I desire now this evening to speak upon that which you all have come to hear—namely, my impressions and experiences in respect to the condition of things in Great Britain, as they relate to this struggle and this country. Among the wise things said by that wisest of modern political writers, DE TOCQUEVILLE, is this: "That it is impossible to judge of the affairs of one country by applying to them the experiences and the rules of another one." There are many reasons why one would have presumed beforehand that it was easy to understand British feeling and British policy. There was a similarity of institutions and a sameness of radical principles; but that very similarity, since it begets, by different institutions and different vehicles, different policies in the end, is liable to deceive us, and we are liable to come to many conclusions, because, upon the face, things look like those to which we are accustomed at home. I myself have experienced that, for I had judged of the condition of England from the impressions produced upon me by my first four weeks' tarry there in the Summer. I should have judged very wrongly, as judged by my present convictions. Nor do I feel myself now adequate to analyze or state either the causes or the results of my feeling; I am quite aware that I am imperfect in my views in many directions. Nor can I presume to say that I present you opinions. My nature gives intensity to my expressions, and yet I wish beforehand to ask you to consider that the statements that I make are impressions liable to mistake, subject to corrections that may afterward be made in them. And with these preliminary remarks I will tell you what I saw and found. You are aware that the original expression of our people was almost universal that in Great Britain we should find a sympathiser, ready and prepared. One thing we counted sure, and that was, that if all the other nations stood aloof, there was one that would stand by us in the hour of our peril, and that was Great Britain. And the sharpness of our retaliatory complaints was acuminated by that very disappointment of a very confident conviction. When I was asked in Great Britain why the American Press so severely inveighed against England, and was almost silent in respect to France, I said: "Because we in our deepest hearts care for England, and not much for France." (Applause.) "Because under anger, and lower down than prejudice, when you strike the deeper feelings, the Americans know that they have an English origin, and they are proud of their history; when it gets back further than the present generation, (laughter;) and it was this growing affection and sympathy in the best natures and in the best parts of the best natures—it was this that made the disappointment of public expression so sharp and so hard to be borne when Great Britain failed our expectations and gave us no sympathy. We never asked for help. We never asked that she should lend us anything or stretch out so much as the little finger of her right hand. We did ask simply the generous confidence and generous moral sympathy and that was all, and that we did not get, and we felt sharply, the conduct of England. The expression of public feeling had an effect of throwing her moral weight against the North and for the South. So I told them. I carefully discriminated between the intention and the result. What men intend has much to do with judging of their moral character; but what men do does not depend always on their intention. And when, therefore, the British people disclaimed sympathy with the South, or a disposition to go against their own principles as represented by the North, I said to them, "What your intentions are you can best judge, but what the effect of your attitude is we on the other side can best judge," and we know that the moral influence of Great Britain has substantially gone for more than two years to help the rebellion of the slaveocracy of the South, and to hinder the progress of free institutions in the North. And if there is rescue or relief—if there is redemption finally, Great Britain must stand aside, and it must be said: "The nation that boasted of her free institutions and her sovereign sympathy with the welfare of the common peoples has had no part nor lot in the great work." (Applause.) The denial of moral sympathy in Great Britain was only interpreted by the active exertions of certain parts of the British people on behalf of the South, so much so that it, I think, will scarcely be denied by any man that if the shipyards, and foundries, and looms, and shops of Great Britain had refused their succor to rebellion, the rebellion would have died out in the nation long ago. I said in private what it did not seem altogether judicious to say in public, that in some sense I might bring this war and lay it at the feet of the British people, and say, not that you intended it, but that the course of conduct pursued, legal or illegal, was such that, but for you, the rebellion would have perished almost in the beginning of it. (Applause.) And no man but knows that there was also in England an extraordinary spectacle of men who, from sheer hatred of war, by misjudgment add mistake were left to foment it. There never was a misposition more signal than that of the British public, as represented in their leading intelligent classes, in this conflict. There never was a case where a nation, by its upper classes, went so unquestionably in favor of slavery at the same time that they occupied themselves in the intensest denunciations of slavery—that went against free society at the very time they were particularly praising free society and arrogating to themselves its highest claims and honors. Under such circumstances we were, you recollect, drifting right toward war. I told the British people that war was not our choice, and yet terrible and cruel as it was, there was something in this struggle so near to us, and so indispensable to national life, that rather than that there should be interference, rather than there should be disruption and dismemberment, rather than that this republican free Government should fail, we would stand war with Great Britain, with France, with Europe. (Applause.) It would have been difficult to say this without the appearance of threat; but that difficulty was itself dissolved by the iterated and reiterated charges brought against me of having been bellicose in my own country, and of having threatened all manner of desolation to Great Britain; and my reply was this, that I felt a part, and full part in proportion, of the deep indignation which my own people felt against Great Britain, and that I had never desired war, and abhorred it, but that I held the great principles of free Republican Government to be so precious that we would not give them up, not even at the threat nor infliction of war, no matter who brought it upon us. This being the cruel disappointment that we experienced in our expectation of sympathy from Great Britain, you will ask me, "What did you find to the facts and condition of things?" I found, in the first place, on going there, that every man I met was a Southern man, not literally born in the South, but this is the division they have themselves made. These are the terms applied. They are Southerners and Northerners even more than we are here. I found that on the railways, on the boats, in the hotels, wherever there was a traveling public, there was a public that sympathized with the South, and adverse to the North. It was not an uncommon thing to hear a gentleman who had talked freely and kindly with me on other matters say as the news was discussed, "Bad news we have got by the last steamer." "Ah, what is the news?" being a little troubled. "I understand," he would reply, "that MAGEE has driven LEE entirely out of Pennsylvania." (Laughter.) "God send us much more bad news, then," said I. But coming from communities enthusiastic and almost homogeneous on this subject, it was strange to my ears to hear well-dressed and well-read men congratulate themselves on disasters to the North, and rejoicing in the success of the South; and such is the case. Nor will there return to your side one young man has been traveling that will not bring back to you this substantial account; that wherever he went almost every man whom he met, without exception, was against the North and in favor of the South; and you can well imagine the impression that would be made on the mind of such. They would say "There is no question about this matter—the whole British nation is against us." Go where you will, up or down, you will find it all the same, and that was the effect impressed upon my mind. On still further inquiry, I was disappointed to find that that bon ton to which myself belonged—the Congregationalists, known as Independents in England, I had supposed, since they are set for a testimony for freedom and have been arrayed almost invariably on the side of struggling peoples and struggling liberties, I supposed I should find them right, I did not. I do not mean that there is not a very large part of that power whose principles are right. They will be included under the head which I shall mention by and by, but I am sorry to say that I did not find the influential and leading clergymen of that denomination, nor the influential and leading laymen on our side. They said that they sympathized with liberty. Yes, they sympathized with liberty just exactly as the icicles sympathize with sunlight and Summer. (Laughter.) It chills you to come near them; and I said to them, I want no such sympathy, and I want nothing if it cannot come from enthusiastic hearts, it does no good and we do not want it. I found also the most profound ignorance of our affair and of the operation of our institutions, and that too, in quarters where I had a right to expect more intelligence. I found the most active and unscrupulous efforts made by Southern men to stir up animosity toward our country. And let me say that the bad cause was better served than a good one there, as to some extent it has been in our own land, for I am sure that the South, for a bad cause, has more nearly put forth every particle of strength that it has to put forth than we have for a good cause. And as it is at home, it was abroad. Where we sent one man to England to influence public opinion, they sent a score; where we print one book of information, they a library; where we touched one spring, they touched a hundred. They seemed to pervade England, and they seemed, with the unerring instinct of selfishness and despotism, to know just where to undermine the generous and better feelings—just where to invoke the influence of ignorance—just where to touch men so that principle should fall and profit take its place. (Applause.) You may then imagine the surprise and skepticism with which, under these circumstances, I received the assurance of friends on every side that the great heart of the British nation was on our side. I had found nobody except unconditional friends of emancipation in whose society I was thrown—I had found almost nobody that spoke kindly of us on that seemed to be in sympathy with us, and yet my ears were filled with these assurances day and night. "You are mistaken, you are mistaken, this great English people are sound at heart." I said where under heavens do the English people keep their hearts, then? (Laughter and applause.) And if I had spoken in my early visit to England in June, I could not have spoken as I now do and shall. Neither on my first return from the Continent in September could I have understood and felt what I understand now. In some measure, and entirely believe that they were right, and that, after all, the great heart of the British nation is with us of the North. (Great applause.)

Let me take up, then, one part of society after another, and state, as I understand them to be, the facts. First, there is the great commercial class of England, those that are making money and those that have made it; if you please, call them the plutocracy. They are against us. In the first place there is a large class of men that are actively employed in supplying the South with all its necessaries—except principle, (laughter,) and they are making on suppose that they are making large fortunes. We cannot doubt which side they take. The next is a very large class of men who, for precisely an opposite reason, somehow are opposed to the North and in favor of the South; namely, those who have been accustomed to make money, but found this interrupting war has stopped their profits; and men that want to make money, but do not; they are opposed to us. And between these two classes lies an intermediate one of men, who are bewildered and perplexed, and see that business is more or less affected, as it is over the whole continent, by its sympathetic relations with this continent. They say when will this war end? and as the offensive is on the northern side, they feel as though whenever the North will stop aggressing the Sout the war will stop. So in the main they are against us. It may be lowered down to this: that while there are very noble exceptions here and there all through England—men that stand out of their class above and against it, not speaking comprehensibly, the commercial class of England are against the North, and in favor of the South. I have spoken of the religious people. It is very difficult for me to analyze the causes that have turned both the established churchmen and the dissenters in respect to their most influential men against us. I do not think so in respect to the laymen but the influential layman and the influential clergymen, I think, are adverse to us as a body. The ground usually taken is this: that the South is not choose; and secondly, that the war is a great sin. And nowhere else in this world is there so tender a conscience on the subject of the war as Great Britain—when she is not waging it herself. (Great applause.) She has, I believe, only three wars on hand now—in China, Japan, and, I believe, in Australia—no matter where it is, it is somewhere; and the rest of her leisure she occupies with a profound regret and horror for this American war. If it was for but a ship on the sea, she was ready to go to war with us; if it was for the territory of a remote island in the Antartic Ocean, she was ready to go to war with the savages; if it was but to beat down the cities of Japan, she had no objection to burn the seat of 150,000 inhabitants in it; but when a people are making war for their own life, for everything that dignifies humanity, they stand throwing out their hands that men will make war. (Laughter.) But I am sorry to say that, while from the Friends, who have always maintained as against their own countrymen a consistent testimony against war, it should have been expected, from those men, that had no particular objection to the Crimean war, none to the opium war in China, and none to the war that they now have, if not on their hands, on the tips of their fingers, I told them to their faces, in Exeter Hall, there was not a land on the face of the globe against which they had not dashed their bloody prows and that their flag was a symbol of their history—a cross inscribed on a field of blood. (Great applause.) The English nobility, as a class are also against us. I shall read some very noble exceptions by-and-by. But these exceptions do not alter the general statement that the nobility as a class are against us. For the most obvious reason we are not accustomed to estimate the effect of our example upon European institutions. When he takes his walk abroad, it is not the elephant that weighs and measures its own gravity as he treads on the field-mouse's tail. It is the mouse that meditates. (Laughter.) A gigantic nation as this, on such a continent as this, while we are treading on the steps of accomplishing history, we are not feeling the jar that we ourselves are making; but they that have thrones and aristocratic privileges do; and they are the best interpreters of the reactionary influence of Amerikan ideas and American institutions. And it was the Saturday Review, that scholarly, keen, brilliant, unprincipled paper of England; it was that paper that had the frankness to say that Americans must not thing that their remarks were because they disliked us, but it was because they found our ideas and our example working in Great Britain, and they were obliged in order to defeat these ideas in England to attack us in America. They are there, fighting home battles; for there is an unerring instinct—there is this feeling—that if a Government can be so efficient, covering such a continent, and so ludicrously cheap, and so free from maintain our expensive and complicated Government in our sphere? Lest they should not think of it themselves, millions of common people, who are being taxed perpetually, suggest it to their attention. Do you suppose they do not know it? Do you not know that the effect of our Revolution was to send revolution all through Europe? The causes of it were all prepared. It was the torch of our Revolutionary war that set fire to the trains that burned all over Europe. They don't forget it. They dread the reactionary influence of American ideas. Such prosperity—such power and at so little expense—with so few monopolies and prerogatives to the favored classes! Therefore, when they oppose us, it is not to be construed as malignant opposition to us—it is nothing more than another form of self-love, for it is self defending itself. If you had been born with a coronet on your head, you would have done just so. (Laughter.) In Parliament, if a vote were taken to-day according to the private thoughts, sympathies and wishes among members, I suppose they would vote five to one against the North and in favor of the South. It is believed, too, by those well informed, that at least a portion of the Government have been entirely willing to go into a rupture with the North, and that but for the unflinching restraints they would have done so long ago. It is the impression throughout the realm that the Sovereign of Great Britain has been from the first our judicious but our steadiest friend. (Prolonged applause.) It is believed and so represented to me that her never rightly estimated and lamented consort was our fast friend, and that among the last acts of his life were those which erased from documents presented to him sentences that would have inflamed the growing anger. (Renewed applause.) He died with the blessing upon his head, "Blessed are the peacemakers." (Applause.) All through in the British Government, as at present constituted, and I shall read you their names bye-and-bye, there are several that are known to be warm and disinterested in their regard for the North, as there are others in that Government who, it is known in England—at least it was so represented to me by those who ought to know—who would not hesitate to plunge the Continent in a war for the sake of disrupting this nation. And if you ask me what is the great underlying influence that has been at work upon the upper class of England, I answer thus:

1. Commercial interest and rivalry therein.

2. Class power and the fear of contagion and American ideas.

3. (I know not how I shall say it so that it shall be the least offensive to our friends on the other side, but they have not come and you have not come to the bottom of the conduct of Great Britain until you have touched that delicate and real foundation cause,) we are too large and strong a nation. (Laughter.)

This is, in my judgment, the right of the whole matter. A distinguished clergyman of London, personally kind and friendly to me, said to me in these very words: "Mr. BEECHER, you may just as well have it said to you; you have been growing so strong that we have felt for a good many years that we had got to take you down, and we were very glad when the job was taken from our hands by your own people." (Laughter.) When Mr. ROEBUCK—whose speech it was my great privilege to hear—(laughter)—declared that same fact in Parliament, it was cheered immensely, but reprobated in the Times and in the other presses that sympathized with the South, not because he had not spoken the truth, but because it was a truth not best to be spoken. (Laughter.) It is said (and I intended to have brought here to night to have read) in one of their recent publications—and it was the immediate cause of one of my speeches there—that we were a lawless and arrogant set of men; were proud of our sudden growth; and it is said that even Mr. BEECHER himself was regarded as a specimen of what they should have to deal with in the nation supposed to be composed of men breathing that sort of threats. (Laughter.) Now when men make such lamentable mistakes as to suppose that such a peaceful man as I am is so dangerous, (laughter) is it to be supposed that they would not make a mistake in estimating the whole nation? (Renewed laughter.) It is the sun that makes the seeds grow. It is the light that stimulates the seeds into growth; but under all this is the dunghill that makes the heat that causes the seeds to spring up under the genial influences of the sun. And it is just exactly that hot bed at the b

ADDRESS

DELIVERED AT GETTYSBURGH

ON THE

NINETEENTH OF NOVEMBER

AT THE

CONSECRATION OF THE CEMETERY

Prepared for the Interment of the Remains of Those Who Fell on the 1st, 2d and 3d of July, in the Battles There.

BY EDWARD EVERETT.

It was appointed by law in Athens, that the obsequies of the citizens who fell in battle should be performed at the public expense, and in the most honorable manner. Their bones were carefully gathered up from the funeral pyre, where their bodies were consumed, and brought home to the city. There for three days before the interment, they lay in state, beneath tents of honor, to receive the votive offerings of friends and relatives,—flowers, weapons, precious ornaments, painted vases, (wonders of art which after two thousand years adorn the museums of modern Europe,)—the last tributes of surviving affection. Ten coffins of funereal cypress received the honorable deposit, one for each of the tribes of the city, and an eleventh in memory of the unrecognized, but not therefore unhonored, dead, and of those whose remains could not be recovered. On the fourth day the mournful procession was formed; mothers, wives, sisters, daughters, led the way, and to them it was permitted by the simplicity of ancient manners to utter aloud their lamentations for the beloved and the lost; the male relatives of the deceased followed; citizens and strangers closed the train. Thus marshalled they moved to the place of interment in that famous Ceramicus, the most beautiful suburb of Athens, which had been adorned by CIMON, the son of MILTIADES, with walks and fountains and columns; whose groves were filled with altars, shrines and temples; whose gardens were ever green with streams from the neighboring hills, and shaded with the trees sacred to Minerva, and coeval with the foundation of the city; whose circuit inclosed

> "the olive grove of Academe
> PLATO'S retirement, where the Attic bird
> Trilled his thick-warbled note the Summer long;"

whose pathways gleamed with the monuments of the illustrious dead, the work of the most consummate masters that ever gave life to marble. There, beneath the overarching plane trees, upon a lofty stage erected for the purpose, it was ordained by law that a funeral oration should be pronounced by some citizen of Athens, in the presence of the assembled multitude.

Such were the tokens of respect required by law to be paid at Athens, to the memory of those who had fallen in the cause of their country. To those alone who fell at Marathon, a peculiar honor was reserved. As the battle fought upon that immortal field was distinguished from all others in Grecian history for its influence over the fortunes of Hellas,—as it depended upon the event of that day, whether Greece should live, a glory and a light to all coming time, or should expire, like the meteor of a moment; so the honors awarded to its martyr-heroes were such as were bestowed by Athens on no other occasion. They alone of all her sons were entombed upon the spot, which they had forever rendered famous. Their names were inscribed upon ten pillars erected upon the monumental tumulus which covered their ashes, (where, after six hundred years, they were read by the traveler PAUSANIAS,) and although the columns, beneath the hand of barbaric violence and time, have long since disappeared, the venerable mound still marks the spot where they fought and fell:

> "That battle-field, where Persia's victim hordes,
> First bowed beneath the brunt of Hellas' sword."

And shall I, fellow-citizens, who, after an interval of twenty-three centuries, a youthful pilgrim from a world unknown to Ancient Greece, have wandered over that illustrious plain, ready to put off the shoes from off my feet, as one that stands on holy ground, have gazed with respectful emotion on the mound which still protects the remains of those who rolled back the tide of Persian invasion, and rescued the land of popular liberty, of letters, and arts from the ruthless foe, stand unmoved over the graves of our dear brethren, who but yesterday—on three of those all-important days which decide a nation's history; days on whose issue it depended whether this august Republican Union, founded by some of the wisest statesmen that ever lived, cemented with the blood of some of the purest patriots that ever died, should perish or endure—rolled back the tide of an invasion, not less unprovoked, not less ruthless, than that which came to plant the dark banner of Asiatic despotism and slavery on the free soil of Greece? Heaven forbid! And could I prove so insensible to every prompting of patriotic duty and affection, not only would you, fellow-citizens, gathered, many of you, from distant States, who have come to take part in these pious offices of gratitude—you, respected fathers, brethren, matrons, sisters, who surround me, cry out for shame, but the forms of brave and patriotic men who fill these honored graves would heave with indignation beneath the sod.

We have assembled, friends, fellow-citizens, at the invitation of the Executive of the great Central State of Pennsylvania, seconded by the Governors of eighteen other loyal States of the Union, to pay the last tribute of respect to the brave men, who, in the hard-fought battles of the 1st, 2d and 3d days of July last, laid down their lives for the country on these hill-sides and the plains spread out before us, and whose remains have been gathered into the cemetery which we consecrate this day. As my eye ranges over the fields whose sods were so lately moistened by the blood of gallant and loyal men, I feel as never before, how truly it was said of old that it is sweet and becoming to die for one's country. I feel as never before, how justly, from the dawn of history to the present time, men have paid the homage of their gratitude and admiration to the memory of those who nobly sacrifice their lives, that their fellow-men may live in safety. And if this tribute were ever due, when—to whom—could it be more justly paid than to those whose last resting-place we this day commend to the blessing of Heaven and of men.

For consider, my friends, what would have been the consequences to the country, to yourselves, and to all you hold dear, if those who sleep beneath our feet, and their gallant comrades, who survive to serve their country on other fields of danger, had failed in their duty on those memorable days. Consider what, at this moment, would be the condition of the United States, if that noble Army of the Potomac, instead of gallantly and for the second time beating back the tide of invasion from Maryland and Pennsylvania, had been itself driven from these well-contested heights; thrown back in confusion on Baltimore; or trampled down, discomfited, scattered to the four winds. What, under the circumstances, would not have been the fate of the Monumental City, of Harrisburgh, of Philadelphia, of Washington—the Capital of the Union, each and every one of which would have lain at the mercy of the enemy, accordingly as it might have pleased him, spurred only by passion, flushed with victory, and confident of continued success, to direct his course?

For this we must bear in mind, it is one of the great lessons of the war, indeed of every war, that it is impossible for a people without military organization, inhabiting the cities, towns and villages of an open country, including of course the natural proportion of non-combatants of either sex and of every age, to withstand the inroad of a veteran army. What defence can be made by the inhabitants of villages mostly built of wood, of cities unprotected by walls—nay, by a population of men, however high-toned and resolute, whose aged parents demand their care, whose wives and children are clustering around them, against the charge of the war-horse whose neck is clothed with thunder, against flying artillery, and batteries of rifled cannon planted on every commanding eminence, against the onset of trained veterans led by skillful chiefs? No, my friends, army must be met by army; battery by battery; squadron by squadron, and the shock of organized thousands must be encountered by the firm breasts and valiant arms of other thousands, as well organized and as skillfully led. It is no reproach, therefore, to the unarmed population of the country to say that we owe it to the brave men who sleep in their beds of honor before us and their gallant surviving associates, not merely that your fertile fields, my friends of Pennsylvania and Maryland, were redeemed from the presence of the invader, but that your beautiful Capitals were not given up to threatened plunder, perhaps laid in ashes—Washington seized by the enemy, and a blow struck at the heart of the nation.

Who that hears me has forgotten the thrill of joy that ran through the country on the 4th of July—auspicious day for the glorious tidings, and rendered still more so by the simultaneous fall of Vicksburgh, when the telegraph flashed through the land the assurance from the President of the United States, that the Army of the Potomac, under Gen. MEADE, had again smitten the invader? Sure I am that, with the ascriptions of praise that rose to Heaven from twenty millions of freemen, with the acknowledgments that breathed from patriotic lips throughout the length and breadth of America to the surviving officers and men who had rendered the country this inestimable service, there beat in every loyal bosom a throb of tender and sorrowful gratitude to the martyrs who had fallen on the sternly contested field. Let a nation's fervent thanks make some amends for the toils and sufferings of those who survive. Would that the heartfelt tribute could penetrate these honored graves!

In order that we may comprehend, to their full extent, our obligations to the martyrs and surviving heroes of the Army of the Potomac, let us contemplate for a few moments, my friends, the train of events, which culminated in the battles of the 1st, 2d and 3d of July. Of this stupendous rebellion, planned, as its originators boast, more than thirty years ago, matured and prepared for during an entire generation, finally commenced because, for the first time since the adoption of the Constitution, an election of President had been effected without the votes of the South, (which retained, however, the control of the two other branches of the Government,) the occupation of the National Capital, with the seizure of the public archives and of the treaties with Foreign Powers was an essential feature. This was in substance, within my personal knowledge, admitted, in the Winter of 1860-1, by one of the most influential leaders of the rebellion, and it was fondly thought that this object could be effected by a bold and sudden movement on the 4th of March, 1861. There is abundant proof also that a darker project was contemplated, if not by the responsible chiefs of the rebellion, yet by nameless ruffians, willing to play a subsidiary and murderous part in the treasonable drama. It was accordingly maintained by the rebel emissaries abroad, in the circles to which they found access, that the new American Minister ought not, when he arrived, to be received as the Envoy of the United States, inasmuch as before that time Washington would be captured, and the capital of the nation and the archives and muniments of the Government would be in the possession of the Confederates. In full accordance, also, with this threat, it was declared by the rebel Secretary of War at Montgomery, in the presence of his Chief and of his colleagues, and of five thousand hearers, while the tidings of the assault on Sumter were traveling over the wires on that fatal 12th of April, 1861, that before the end of May "the flag which now flaunted the breeze (as he expressed it) would float over the dome of the Capitol at Washington."

At the time this threat was made, the rebellion was confined to the cotton-growing States, and it was well understood by them, that the only hope of drawing any of the other slaveholding States into the conspiracy, was by bringing about a conflict of arms, and "firing the heart of the South" by the effusion of blood. This was declared by the Charleston Press to be the object for which Sumter was to be assaulted, and the emissaries sent from Richmond, to urge on the unhallowed work, gave the promise that with the first drop of blood that should be shed, Virginia would place herself by the side of South Carolina.

In pursuance of this original plan of the leaders of the rebellion, the capture of Washington has been continually had in view, not merely for the sake of its public buildings, as the Capital of the Confederacy, but as the necessary preliminary to the absorption of the Border States, and for the moral effect in the eyes of Europe of possessing the metropolis of the Union.

I allude to these facts, not perhaps enough borne in mind, as a sufficient refutation of the pretence on the part of the rebels, that the war is one of self-defence, waged for the right of self-goverment. It is in reality a war originally levied by ambitious men in the cotton-growing States, for the purpose of drawing the slaveholding Border States into the vortex of the conspiracy, first by sympathy, which in the case of Southeastern Virginia, North Carolina, part of Tennessee and Arkansas, succeeded; and then by force, and for the purpose of subjugating Western Virginia, Kentucky, Eastern Tennessee, Missouri, and Maryland; and it is a most extraordinary fact, considering the clamors of the rebel chiefs on the subject of invasion, that not a soldier of the United States has entered the States last named, except to defend the Union-loving inhabitants from the armies and guerrillas of the rebels.

In conformity with these designs on the City of Washington, and notwithstanding the disastrous results of the invasion of 1862, it was determined by the rebel Government last Summer to resume the offensive in that direction. Unable to force the passage of the Rappahannock where Gen. HOOKER, notwithstanding the reverse at Chancellorsville in May, was strongly posted, the Confederate General resorted to strategy. He had two objects in view. The first was by a rapid movement northward, and by manœuvering with a portion of his army on the east side of Blue Ridge, to tempt HOOKER from his base of operations, thus leading him to uncover the approaches to Washington, to throw it open to a raid by STUART's cavalry, and enable LEE himself to cross the Potomac in the neighborhood of Poolesville, and thus fall upon the capital. This plan of operations was wholly frustrated. The design of the rebel General was promptly discovered by Gen. HOOKER, and moving himself with great rapidity from Fredericksburgh, he preserved unbroken the inner line, and stationed the various corps of his army at all the points protecting the approach to Washington, from Centreville up to Leesburgh. From this vantage ground the rebel General in vain attempted to draw him. In the meantime, by the vigorous operations of PLEASANTON's cavalry, the cavalry of STUART, though greatly superior in numbers, was so crippled as to be disabled from performing the part assigned it in the campaign. In this manner, Gen. LEE's first object, viz., the defeat of HOOKER's army on the south of the Potomac, and a direct march on Washington, was baffled.

The second part of the Confederate plan, and which is supposed to have been undertaken in opposition to the views of Gen. LEE, was to turn the demonstration northward into a real invasion of Maryland and Pennsylvania, in the hope that, in this way, Gen. HOOKER would be drawn to a distance from the Capital; that some opportunity would occur of taking him at disadvantage, and, after defeating his army, of making a descent upon Baltimore and Washington. This part of Gen. LEE's plan, which was substantially the repetition of that of 1862, was not less signally defeated, with what honor to the arms of the Union the heights on which we are this day assembled will forever attest.

Much time had been uselessly consumed by the rebel General in his unavailing attempts to out manœuvre Gen. HOOKER. Although Gen. LEE broke up from Fredericksburgh on the 3d of June, it was not till the 24th that the main body of his army entered Maryland, and instead of crossing the Potomac, as he intended, east of the Blue Ridge, he was compelled to do it at Shepherdstown and Williamsport, thus materially deranging his entire plan of campaign north of the river. STUART, who had been sent with his cavalry to the east of the Blue Ridge to guard the passes of the mountains, to mask the movements of LEE, and to harass the Union General in crossing the river, having been very severely handled by PLEASANTON at Beverly Ford, Aldie and Upperville, instead of being able to retard Gen. HOOKER's advance, was driven himself away from his connection with the army of LEE, and cut off for a fortnight from all communication with it; a circumstance to which Gen. LEE, in his report, alludes more than once, with evident displeasure. Let us now rapidly glance at the incidents of the eventful campaign.

A detachment from EWELL's corps, under JENKINS, had penetrated on the 15th of July as far as Chambersburgh. This movement was intended at first merely as a demonstration, and as a marauding expedition for supplies. It had, however, the salutary effect of alarming the country, and vigorous preparations here in Pennsylvania and in the sister States were made to repel the inroad. After two days passed at Chambersburgh, JENKINS, anxious for his communications with EWELL, fell back with his plunder to Hagerstown. Here he remained for several days, and having swept the recesses of Cumberland Valley, came down upon the eastern flank of the South Mountain, and pushed his marauding party as far as Waynesboro. On the 22d the remainder of EWELL's corps crossed the river and moved up the valley. They were followed on the 24th by LONGSTREET and HILL, who crossed at Williamsport and Shepherdstown, and pushing up the valley encamped at Chambersburgh on the 27th. In this way the whole rebel army, estimated at 90,000 infantry, upwards of 10,000 cavalry and 4,000 or 5,000 artillery, making a total of 105,000 of all arms, was concentrated in Pennsylvania. Up to this time no report of HOOKER's movements had been received by Gen. LEE, who having been deprived of his cavalry had no means of obtaining information. Rightly judging, however, that no time would be lost by the Union army in the pursuit, in order to detain it on the eastern side of the mountains in Maryland and Pennsylvania, and thus preserve his communications by the way of Williamsport, he had, before his own arrival at Chambersburgh, directed EWELL to send detachments from his corps to Carlisle and York. The latter detachment under EARLY passed through this place on the 26th of June. You need not, fellow-citizens of Gettysburgh, that I should recall to you those moments of alarm and distress, precursors as they were of the more trying scenes which were so soon to follow.

As soon as Gen. HOOKER perceived that the advance of the Confederates into the Cumberland Valley was not a mere feint to draw him away from Washington, he moved himself rapidly in pursuit. Attempts, as we have seen, were made to harass and retard his passage across the Potomac. These attempts were not only altogether unsuccessful, but so unskillfully made as to place the entire Federal army between the cavalry of STUART and the army of LEE. While the latter was massed in the Cumberland Valley, STUART was east of the mountains, with HOOKER's army between, and GREGG's cavalry in close pursuit. STUART was accordingly compelled to force a march northward, which was destitute of all strategical character, and which deprived his chief of all means of obtaining intelligence.

No time, as we have seen, had been lost by Gen. HOOKER in the pursuit of LEE. The day after the rebel army entered Maryland the Union army crossed the Potomac at Edwards' Ferry, and by the 28th lay between Harper's Ferry and Frederick. The force of the enemy on that day was partly at Chambersburgh, and partly on the Cashtown road, in the direction of Gettysburgh, while the detachments from EWELL's corps, of which mention has been made, had reached the Susquehannah, opposite Harrisburgh and Columbia. That a great battle must soon be fought no one could doubt, but in the apparent and perhaps real absence of plan on the part of LEE, it was impossible to foretell the precise scene of the encounter. Wherever fought, consequences the most momentous hung upon the result.

In this critical and anxious state of affairs, Gen. HOOKER was relieved, and Gen. MEADE was summoned to the chief command of the army, and it appears to my unmilitary judgment to reflect the highest credit upon him, upon his predecessor, and upon the corps commanders of the Army of the Potomac, that a change could take place in the chief command of so large a force on the eve of a general battle—the various corps necessarily moving on lines somewhat divergent, and all in ignorance of the enemy's intended point of concentration—and not an hour's hesitation should ensue in the advance of any portion of the entire army.

Having assumed chief command on the 28th, Gen. MEADE directed his left wing under REYNOLDS upon Emmettsburgh and his right upon New-Windsor, leaving Gen. French with 11,000 men to protect the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and convey the public property from Harper's Ferry to Washington. Buford's cavalry was then at this place, and KILPATRICK, at Hanover, where he encountered and defeated the rear of STUART's cavalry, who was roving the country in search of the main army of LEE. On the rebel side, HILL had reached Fayetteville on the Cashtown road on the 28th, and was followed on the same road by LONGSTREET on the 29th. The eastern side of the mountain, as seen from Gettysburgh, was lighted up at night by the camp-fires of the enemy's advance, and the country swarmed with his foraging parties. It was now too evident to be questioned, that the thunder cloud so long gathering blackness, would soon burst on some part of the devoted vicinity of Gettysburgh.

The 30th of June was a day of important preparation. At 11½ in the morning Gen. BUFORD passed through Gettysburgh upon a reconnoissance in force with his cavalry, upon the Chambersburgh road. The information obtained by him was immediately communicated to Gen. REYNOLDS, who was in consequence directed to occupy Gettysburgh. That gallant officer accordingly, with the First corps, marched from Emmettsburgh to within six or seven miles of this place, and encamped on the right bank of Marsh's Creek. Our right wing, meantime, was moved to Manchester. On the same day the corps of HILL and LONGSTREET were pushed still further forward on the Chambersburgh road, and distributed in the vicinity of Marsh's Creek, while a reconnoissance was made by the Confederate General PETTIGREW up to a very short distance from this place. Thus at nightfall on the 30th of June the greater part of the rebel force was concentrated in the immediate vicinity of two corps of the Union army, the former refreshed by two days passed in comparative repose, and deliberative preparation for the encounter; the latter separated by a march of one or two days from their supporting corps, and doubtful at what precise point they were to expect an attack.

And now the momentous day, a day to be forever remembered in the annals of the country, arrived. Early in the morning on the 1st of July the conflict began. I need not say that it would be impossible for me to comprise, within the limits of the hour, such a narrative as would do anything like full justice to the all-important events of these three great days, or to the merit of the brave officers and men of every rank, of every arm of the service, and of every loyal State, who bore their part in the tremendous struggle;—alike those who nobly sacrificed their lives for their country, and those who survive, many of them scarred with honorable wounds,—the objects of our admiration and gratitude. The astonishingly minute, accurate, and graphic accounts contained in the journals of the day, prepared from personal observation by reporters who witnessed the scenes and often shared the perils which they describe, and the highly valuable "Notes" of Professor JACOBS of the University in this place, to which I am greatly indebted, will abundantly supply the deficiency of my necessarily too condensed statement.*

Gen. REYNOLDS, on arriving at Gettysburgh in the morning of the 1st, found BUFORD with his cavalry warmly engaged with the enemy, whom he held most gallantly in check. Hastening himself to the front, Gen. REYNOLDS directed his men to be moved over the fields from the Emmettsburgh Road, in front of McMILLAN's and Dr. SCHMUCKER's, under cover of the Seminary Ridge, and, without a moment's hesitation, attacked the enemy, at the same time sending orders to the Eleventh corps (Gen. HOWARD's) to advance as promptly as possible. Gen. REYNOLDS immediately found himself engaged with a force which greatly outnumbered his own, and had scarcely made his dispositions for the action, when he fell, mortally wounded, at the head of his advance. The command of the First corps devolved on Gen. DOUBLEDAY, and that of the field on Gen. HOWARD, who arrived at 11:30, with SCHURZ's and BARLOW's divisions of the Eleventh corps, the latter of whom received a severe wound. Thus strengthened, the advantage of the battle was for some time on our side. The attacks of the rebels were vigorously repulsed by WADSWORTH's division of the Eleventh corps, and a large number of prisoners, including Gen. ARCHER, were captured. At length, the enemy continued to move down from the north and northwest, in connection with the dispersed Confederates from the main body on the Cashtown road, and by the divisions of RODES and EARLY, coming down by separate lines from Heidlersberg and taking post on our extreme right, turned the fortunes of the day. Our army, after contesting the ground for five hours, was obliged to yield to the enemy, whose force outnumbered them two to one, and toward the close of the afternoon Gen. HOWARD deemed it prudent to withdraw the two corps to the heights where we are now assembled. The greater part of the First corps passed through the outskirts of the town, and reached the hill without serious loss or molestation. The Eleventh corps and portions of the First, not being aware that the enemy had already entered the town from the north, attempted to force their way through Washington and Baltimore streets, which, in the crowd and confusion of the scene, they did with a heavy loss in prisoners.

Gen. HOWARD was not unprepared for this turn in the fortunes of the day. Early in the morning he had caused Cemetery Hill to be occupied by Gen. STEINWEHR, with the Third Division of the Eleventh Corps. About the time of the withdrawal of our troops to the hill Gen. HANCOCK arrived, having been sent by Gen. MEADE, on hearing the death of REYNOLDS, to assume the command of the field till he himself could reach the front. In conjunction with Gen. HOWARD, Gen. HANCOCK immediately proceeded to post troops and to repel an attack on our right flank. This attack was feebly made and promptly repulsed. At nightfall our troops on the hill, who had so gallantly sustained themselves during the toil and peril of the day, were cheered by the arrival of Gen. SLOCUM with the Twelfth Corps and of Gen. SICKLES with a part of the Third.

Such was the fortune of the first day, commencing with decided success to our arms, followed by a check, but ending in the occupation of this all-important position. To you, fellow-citizens of Gettysburgh, I need not attempt to portray the anxieties of the ensuing night. Witnessing as you had done with sorrow the withdrawing of our army through your streets, with a considerable loss of prisoners, mourning as you did over the brave men who had fallen; shocked with the widespread desolation around you; of which the wanton burning of the Hannan House in the morning had given the signal, ignorant of the near approach of Gen. MEADE, you passed the weary hours of the night in painful expectation.

Long before the dawn of the 2d of July, the new Commander-in-Chief had arrived at the front. Having received intelligence of the events in progress, and informed by the reports of Gens. HANCOCK and HOWARD of the favorable character of the position, he determined to give battle to the enemy at this point. He accordingly directed the remaining corps of the army to concentrate at Gettysburgh with all possible expedition; and breaking up his headquarters at Taneytown at 10 P. M., he arrived on the field at 1 o'clock on the morning of the 2d of July. Few were the moments given to sleep, during the rapid watches of that brief midsummer's night, by officers or men, though half of our troops were exhausted by the conflict of the day, and the residue wearied by the forced marches which had brought them to the rescue. The full moon, veiled by thin clouds, shone down that night on a strangely unwonted scene—the silence of the grave-yard was broken by the tramp of armed men; by the neigh of the war-horse, the harsh rattle of the wheels of artillery hurrying to their stations, the voice of the battle, the roll of the drum, and all the indescribable tumult of preparation. The various corps of the army as they arrived, were moved to their positions, on the spot where we are assembled, and the ridges that extend southeast and southwest; batteries were planted and breastworks thrown up. The Second and Fifth corps with the rest of the Third had reached the ground by 7 o'clock A. M., but it was not till 9 o'clock in the afternoon that SEDGWICK arrived with the Sixth corps. He had marched thirty-two miles since 9 o'clock in the morning of the day before. It was only on his arrival that the Union army attained an equality of numbers with that of the rebels, posted upon the opposite and parallel ridge, distant from a mile to a mile and a half, and overlapping our position on either wing.

*Besides the sources of information mentioned in the text, I have been kindly favored with a memorandum of the operations of the three days dawn up for me by direction of Maj.-Gen. MEADE, (anticipating the promulgation of his official report) by one of his aids, Col. THEODORE LYMAN, from whom also I have received other important communications relative to the campaign. I have received very valuable documents relative to the battle from Maj.-Gen. HUMPHREYS, Commander-in-Chief of the army, and have been much assisted in drawing up the sketch of the campaign, by the detailed reports, kindly transmitted to me in manuscript from the Adjutant-General's office, of the movements of every corps of the army, for each day, after the breaking up from Fredericksburgh commenced. I derived much assistance from Col. JOHN B. BACHELDER's oral explanation of his beautiful and minute drawing (about to be engraved) of the field of the three days' struggle. With the information derived from these sources, I have compared the statements in Gen. LEE's official report of the campaign dated 3d July, 1863: a well written article, purporting to be an account of the three days' battle in the Richmond Enquirer of the 22d of July; and the article on "The Battle of Gettysburgh and the Campaign of Pennsylvania," by an officer, apparently a Colonel, in the British army, in Blackwood's Magazine for September. The value of the information contained in this last essay may be seen by comparing the statement, under date of 27th of June, that "private property is to be rigidly protected," with the statement in the next sentence but one, that "all the cattle and farm horses having been seized by EWELL, farm labor had come to a complete stand-still." He also, under date of 4th July, speaks of LEE's retreat being incumbered by "EWELL's immense train of plunder." This writer informs us that, on the evening of the 4th July, he heard "reports coming in from the different Generals that the enemy (MEADE's army) was retiring, and had been doing so all day long." At a consultation at headquarters on the 6th, between Gens. LEE, LONGSTREET, HILL and WILLCOX, this writer was told by some one, whose name he prudently left unrecorded, that the army had no intention at present of retreating for good, and that some of the enemy's dispatches had been intercepted in which the following words occur: "The noble but unfortunate Army of the Potomac has again been obliged to retreat before superior numbers!" I much regret that Gen. MEADE's official report was not published in season to enable me to have full advantage of it in preparing the brief sketch of the battles of the three days contained in this address. It reached me but the morning before these pages were sent to the press.

And here I cannot but remark on the providential inaction of the rebel army. Had the contest been renewed by it at daylight on the 2d of July, with the First and Eleventh Corps exhausted by the battle and the retreat: the Third and Twelfth weary from their forced march, and the Second, Fifth and Sixth not yet arrived, nothing but a miracle could have saved the army from destruction. Instead of this, the day dawned, the sun rose, the cool hours of the morning passed, the forenoon wore away, without the slightest aggressive movement on the part of the enemy. Thus time was given for half of our forces to arrive, and take their places in the lines, while the rest of the army enjoyed a much needed half day's repose.

At length between three and four o'clock in the afternoon the work of death began. A signal gun from the hostile batteries was followed by a tremendous cannonade along the rebel lines and this by a heavy advance of infantry, brigade after brigade, commencing on the enemy's right against the left of our army, and so onward to the left centre. A forward movement of Gen. SICKLES, to gain a commanding position from which to repel the rebel attack, drew upon him a destructive fire from the enemy's batteries, and a furious assault from LONGSTREET's and HILL's advancing troops. After a brave resistance on the part of his corps, he was forced back, himself falling severely wounded. This was the critical moment of the second day; but the Fifth and a part of the Sixth corps, with portions of the First and Second, were promptly brought to the support of the Third; the struggle was fierce and murderous, but by sunset our success was decisive and the enemy was driven back in confusion. The most important service was rendered toward the close of the day, in the memorable advance between Round Top and Little Round Top, by Gen. CRAWFORD's division of the Fifth corps, consisting of two brigades of the Pennsylvania Reserves, of which one company was from the town and neighborhood. The rebel Gen. BARKSDALE fell in this encounter, and his force was driven back with great loss in killed and prisoners. At 8 o'clock in the evening a desperate attempt was made by the enemy to storm the position of the Eleventh corps on Cemetery Hill, but here too, after a terrible conflict, he was repulsed with immense loss. EWELL, on our extreme right, who had been weakened by the withdrawal of the troops sent over to support our left, had succeeded in gaining a foothold within a portion of our lines, near Spangler's Spring. This was the only advantage obtained by the rebels to compensate them for the disasters of the day, and of this, as we shall see, they were soon deprived.

Such was the result of the second act of this eventful drama—a day hard fought, and at one moment anxious, and with the exception of the slight reverse just named, crowned with dearly-earned, but uniform success to our arms, auspicious of a glorious termination of the final struggle. On these good omens the night fell.

At dawn of the 3d, Gen. GEARY returned to his position on the right, from which he had hastened the day before to strengthen the left. He was immediately attacked by the enemy, whom, however, after a sharp and decisive action, he drove out of our lines, recovering the ground which had been lost on the preceding day. A spirited contest was kept up all the morning on this part of the line, but Gen. GEARY, reinforced by WHEATON's brigade of the Sixth corps, maintained his position and inflicted very severe losses on the enemy.

Such was the cheering commencement of the third day's work, and with it ended all serious attempts of the enemy on our right. As on the preceding day his efforts were now mainly directed against our left centre and left wing. From 11 till 1¼ o'clock, all was still; a solemn pause of preparation, as if both parties were nerving themselves for the supreme effort. At length the awful silence, more terrible than the wildest tumult of battle, was broken by the roar of 250 pieces of artillery from the opposite ridges joining in a cannonade of unsurpassed violence—the rebel batteries along two-thirds of their line pouring their fire upon Cemetery Hill and the centre and left wing of our army. Having attempted in this way for two hours, but without success, to shake the steadiness of our lines, the enemy rallied his forces for a last grand assault. Their attack was principally directed against the position of our Second corps. Successive lines of rebel infantry moved forward with equal spirit and steadiness, from their cover on the wooded crest of Seminary Ridge, crossing the intervening plain, supported right and left by the choicest brigades and charged furiously up to our batteries. Our own brave troops of the Second corps supported by DOUBLEDAY's division and STANNARD's brigade of the First received the shock with firmness, the ground on both sides was long and fiercely contested and covered with the killed and wounded till after "a determined and gallant struggle," as it is pronounced by Gen. LEE, the rebel advance, consisting of two-thirds of HILL's corps and the whole of LONGSTREET's, including PICKETT's division, the élite of his corps which had not yet been under fire, and was now depended upon to decide the fortune of this last eventful day, was driven back with prodigious slaughter, discomfited, and broken. While these events were in progress at our left centre, the enemy was driven by the Pennsylvania Reserves from a strong position on our extreme left, from which he was annoying our force on "Little Round Top," his battery taken, and three hundred prisoners captured. In the terrific assault on our centre, Gens. HANCOCK and GIBBON were wounded. In the rebel army, ARMISTEAD, KEMPER, PETTIGREW, and TRIMBLE were wounded, the first named mortally, the latter also made prisoners; while Gen. GARNETT was killed, and thirty-five hundred officers and men made prisoners.

These were the expiring agonies of the three days' conflict, and with them the battle ceased. It was fought by the Union army with courage and skill, from the first cavalry skirmish on Wednesday morning, to the fearful rout of the enemy on Friday afternoon, by every arm and every rank of the service, by officers and men; by cavalry, artillery and infantry. The two armies, after the first day, were numerically equal. If the Union force had the advantage of a strong position, the Confederates had that of choosing time and place, the prestige of former victories over the Army of the Potomac and of the success of the first day. Victory does not always fall to the lot of those who deserve it; but that so decisive a triumph, under circumstances like these, was gained by our troops, I am inclined to ascribe, under Providence, to the spirit of exalted patriotism that animated them and a consciousness that they were fighting in a righteous cause.

All hope of defeating our army and securing what Gen. LEE calls "the valuable results" of such an achievement having vanished, he thought only of rescuing from destruction the remains of his shattered forces. In killed, wounded and missing, he had, as far as can be ascertained, suffered a loss of about 37,000 men, rather more than a third of the army which he had transported into and brought with him into Pennsylvania. Perceiving that his only safety was in rapid retreat, he commenced withdrawing his troops at daybreak on the 4th, throwing up field works in front of our left, which, assuming the appearance of a new position, were intended probably to protect the rear of his army in their retreat. That day,—and celebration of the 4th of July for an army of Americans—was passed by him in hurrying off his trains. The main army was in full retreat on the Cashtown and Fairfield roads at nightfall, and moved with such precipitation that, short as the nights were, by daylight the following morning, notwithstanding a heavy rain, the rear guard had left its position. The struggle of the two last days resembled in many respects the battle of Waterloo, and if, in the evening of the third day, Gen. MEADE, like the Duke of Wellington, had had the assistance of a powerful auxiliary army to take up the pursuit, the rout of the rebels would have been as complete as that of NAPOLEON.

Owing to the circumstance above-named the intentions of the enemy were not apparent on the 4th. The moment his retreat was discovered the following morning, he was pursued by our cavalry on the Cashtown road and in the Emmettsburgh and Monterey passes, and by SEDGWICK's corps on the Fairfield road. His rear-guard was briskly attacked at Fairfield; a great number of wagons and ambulances were captured in the passes of the mountains; the country swarmed with his stragglers, and his wounded were literally emptied from the vehicles containing them, into the farm-houses on the road. Gen. LEE, in his report, makes repeated mention of the Union prisoners whom he conveyed into Virginia, somewhat overstating their number. He states also that "such of his wounded as were in a condition to be removed," were forwarded to Williamsport. He does not mention that the number of his wounded not removed and left to the Christian care of the victors was 7,540, not one of whom failed of any attention which it was possible, under the circumstances of the case, to afford them; not one of whom certainly has been put upon Libby Prison fare—lingering death by starvation. Heaven forbid, however, that we should claim any merit for the exercise of common humanity.

Under the protection of the mountain ridge, whose narrow passes are easily held even by a retreating army, Gen. LEE reached Williamsport in safety, and took up a strong position opposite to that place. Gen. MEADE necessarily pursued with the main army by a flank movement through Middletown, Turner's pass having been secured by Gen. FRENCH. Passing through the South Mountain, the Union army came up with that of the rebels on the 12th, and found it securely posted on the heights of Marsh's run. His position was reconnoitered and preparations made for an attack on the 13th. The depth of the river, swollen by the recent rains, authorized the expectation that he would be brought to a general engagement the following day. An advance was accordingly made by Gen. MEADE on the morning of the 14th; but it was soon found that the rebels had escaped in the night, with such haste, that EWELL's corps forded the river where the water was breast high. The cavalry which had rendered the most important services during the three days, and in harassing the enemy's retreat, was now sent in pursuit and captured two guns and a large number of prisoners. In an action which took place at Falling Waters, Gen. PETTIGREW was mortally wounded. Gen. MEADE, in further pursuit of the enemy, crossed the Potomac at Berlin. Thus again covering the approaches to Washington, he compelled the enemy to pass the Blue Ridge at one of the upper gaps, and in about two weeks from the commencement of the campaign Gen. LEE found himself again on the south side of the Rappahannock with the loss of about a third of his army.

Such, most inadequately recounted, is the history of the ever-memorable three days and of the events immediately preceding and following. It has been pretended, in order to diminish the magnitude of this disaster to the rebel cause, that it was merely the repulse of an attack on a strongly-defended position. The tremendous losses on both sides are a sufficient answer to this misrepresentation, and attest the courage and obstinacy with which the three days' battle was waged. Few of the great conflicts of modern times have cost victors and vanquished so great a sacrifice. On the Union side there fell in the whole campaign of Generals killed, REYNOLDS, WEED and ZOOK; and wounded, Gens. BARLOW, BARNES, BUTTERFIELD, DOUBLEDAY, GIBBON, GRAHAM, HANCOCK, SICKLES and WARREN; while of officers below the rank of General and men, there were 2,834 killed, 13,709 wounded, and 6,643 missing. On the Confederate side there were killed on the attack on a strongly-defended position, by officers and men, by cavalry, artillery and infantry, the two armies, after the first day, were numerically equal. If the Union force had the advantage of a strong position, the Confederates had that of choosing time and place, the prestige of former victories over the Army of the Potomac and of the success of the first day. still educing good, has so constituted our natures that the violent excitement of the passions in one direction, is generally followed by a reaction in an opposite direction, and the sooner for the violence. If it were not so, if anger produced abiding anger, if hatred caused undying hatred, if injuries inflicted and retaliated, of necessity led to new retaliations, with forever accumulating compound interest of revenge, then the world, thousands of years ago, would have been turned into an earthly hell, and the nations of the earth would have been resolved into clans of furies and demons, each forever warring with his neighbor. But it is not so; all history teaches a different lesson. The wars of the roses in England lasted an entire generation, from the battle of St. Albans in 1455 to that of Bosworth Field in 1485. Speaking of the former, HUME says: "This was the first blood spilt in that fatal quarrel, which was not finished in less than a course of thirty years; which was signalized by twelve pitched battles; which opened a scene of extraordinary fierceness and cruelty; is computed to have cost the lives of eighty princes of the blood; and almost entirely annihilated the ancient nobility of England. The strong attachments which, at that time, men of the same kindred bore to each other, and the vindictive spirit which was considered a point of honor, rendered the great families implacable in their resentments and widened every moment the breach between the parties." Such was the state of things in England, under which an entire generation grew up; and when HENRY VII, in whom the titles of the two houses were united, went up to London after the battle of Bosworth Field, to mount the throne, he was everywhere received with joyous acclamations "as one ordained and sent from Heaven to put an end to the dissensions" which had so long afflicted the country.

The great rebellion in England of the seventeenth century, after long and angry premonitions, may be said to have begun with the calling of the Long Parliament in 1640, and to have ended with the return of CHARLES II. in 1660—twenty years of discord, conflict and civil war, of confiscation, plunder, havoc; a proud hereditary peerage trampled in the dust; a national Church overturned, its clergy beggared, its most eminent prelate put to death; a military despotism established on the ruins of a monarchy which had subsisted seven hundred years, and the legitimate sovereign brought to the block; the great families which adhered to the King proscribed, impoverished, ruined; prisoners of war sold to slavery in the West Indies—in a word, everything that can embitter and madden contending factions. Such was the state of things for twenty years, and yet, by no gentle transition, but suddenly and when the restoration of affairs appeared more hopeless," the son of the beheaded monarch was brought back to his father's throne, and with such unexpectedness and unanimity that it seemed the merry monarch to exclaim "he had indeed had been his own fault he had been absent so long, for he saw nobody who did not profess to have ever wished for his return." "In this wonderful manner," says CLARENDON, "and with this inconceivable expedition, did God put an end to a rebellion that had raged near twenty years, and had been carried on with all the horrid circumstances of murder, devastation and depredation that fire and sword, in the hands of he most wicked men in the world—(it is a royalist that is speaking)—could be instruments of, almost to the desolation of two kingdoms, and the exceeding defacing and deforming of the third. By these remarkable steps did the merciful hand of God, in this short space of time, not only bind up and heal all these wounds, but even made the scar as undiscernible as, in respect of the deepness, was possible, which was a glorious addition to the deliverance."

In Germany, the wars of the Reformation and of CHARLES V. in the 16th century, the thirty years war in the 17th century, the seven years war in the 18th century, not to speak of other less celebrated contests, entailed upon that country all the miseries of the same stone for more than three centuries. At the close of the last named war "An officer," says ARCHENHOLZ, "in going through seven villages in Hesse and found in them but one human being." More than three hundred principalities, comprehended in the Empire, governed with the fierce passions of proud and petty sovereigns, at the commencement of this period the castles of robber Counts frowned upon every hill-top, a dreadful secret tribunal froze the hearts of men with terror throughout the land; religious hatred mingled its bitter poison in the seething cauldron of provincial animosity—but of all these deadly enmities between the States of Germany, scarcely the memory remains. There is no country in the world, in which the sentiment of national brotherhood is stronger.

In Italy, on the breaking up of the Roman Empire, society might be said to be reached into its original elements, into hostile atoms, whose only movement was that of mutual repulsion. Ruthless barbarians had destroyed the old organizations and covered the land with a merciless feudalism. As the new civilization grew up, under the wing of the Church, the most fearful wars, of confiscation, plunder, havoc; a proud hereditary peerage trampled in the dust; a national Church overturned, its clergy beggared, its most eminent prelate put to death; a military despotism established on the ruins of a monarchy which had subsisted seven hundred years, and the legitimate sovereign brought to the block; the great families which adhered to the King proscribed, impoverished, ruined; prisoners of war sold to slavery in the West Indies—in a word, everything that can embitter and madden contending factions. In France, not to go back to the civil wars of the League in the sixteenth century, and of the Fronde in the seventeenth—not to speak of the dreadful scenes throughout the Kingdom which followed the revocation of the edict of Nantes—we have, in the great Revolution which commenced at the close of the last century, such the tremendous sort of civil strife let loose as rarely before in the history of the world. The reign of Terror, established at Paris, stretched its bloody Briarean arms to every city and village in the land, and of the most deadly feuds which ever divided a people had the power to cause permanent alienation and hatred, this surely was the occasion. But far otherwise the fact. In seven years from the fall of Robespierre, the strong arm of the youthful conqueror brought order out of the chaos of crime and woe; Jacobins, who se hands were scarcely cleansed from the best blood of France, met the returning emigrants, whose estates they had confiscated, and whose kindred they had dragged to the guillotine, in the Imperial antechambers, and when, after another turn in the wheel of Fortune, Louis XVIII. was restored to his throne, he took the regicide Fouche, who had voted for his brother's death, to his counsel and confidence.

The people of Loyal America will never take to their confidence or arm again to a share in their government the heard-hearted men, whose cruel lust of power has brought this desolating war upon the land, but there is no personal bitterness felt even against them. They may live, if they can bear to live after wantonly causing the death of so many thousand fellow-men; they may live in safe security beneath the shelter of the Government they have sought to overthrow, or they may fly to the protection of the Governments of Europe,—some of them are already there, seeking, happily in vain, to obtain the aid of foreign Powers in furtherance of their own treason. There let them stay. The humblest dead soldier, that lies cold and still in his grave before us, is an object of envy beneath the cloth that cover him, in comparisnn with the living man, who is willing to grovel at the foot of a foreign throne, for assistance in compassing the ruin of his country.

But the hour is coming, and now is, when the power of the leaders of the rebellion to delude and inflame must cease. There is no bitterness on the part of the masses. The people of the South are not going to wage an eternal war for the wretched pretexts by which this rebellion is sought to be justified. The bonds that unite us as people, a substantial community of origin, language, belief and law, (the four great ties that hold the societies of men together,) common national and political interests; a common history; a common pride in a glorious ancestry; a common interest in this great heritage of blessings; the very geographical features of the country; the mighty rivers that cross the lines of climate, and thus facilitate the interchange of natural and industrial products; while the wonder-working arm of the engineer has leveled the mountain walls which separate the East and West, compelling your own Alleghanies, my Maryland and Pennsylvania friends, to open wide their everlasting doors to the chariot wheels of traffic and travel; these bonds of union are of perennial force and energy, while the causes of alienation are imaginary factitious and transient. The heart of the people North and South is for the Union. Indications, too plain to be mistaken, announce the fact, both in the East and West of the States in rebellion. In North Carolina and Arkansas the fatal charm at length is broken. At Raleigh and Little Rock the lips of honest and brave men are unsealed, and an independent Press is unlimbering its artillery. The weary masses of the people are yearning to see the dear old flag floating again upon the capitols, and they sigh for the return of the peace, prosperity and happiness, which they enjoyed under a Government whose power was felt only in its blessings.

And now, friends, fellow citizens of Gettysburgh and Pennsylvania, and you from remoter States, let me again invoke your benediction, as we part, on these honored graves. You feel, though the occasion is mournful, that it is good to be here. You feel that it was greatly auspicious for the cause of the country, that the men of the East and the men of the West, the men of nineteen sister States, stood side by side on the perilous ridges of the battle. You now feel a new bond of union, that they shall lie side by side, till a clarion louder than that which marshaled them to the combat, shall awake their slumbers. God bless the Union; it is dearer to us for the blood of those brave men shed in its defence. The spots on which they stood and fell; these pleasant heights, the fertile plain beneath them; the thriving village whose streets so lately rang with the strange din of war; the fields beyond the ridge, where the noble REYNOLDS held the advancing foe at bay, and while he gave up his own life, assured by his forethought and self-sacrifice, the triumph of the two succeeding days; the little streams which wind through the hills, on whose banks in after times, the wondering plowman will turn up, with the rude weapons of savage warfare, the fearful missiles of modern artillery; the Seminary ridge, the peach-orchard, Cemetery, Culp and Wolf Hill, Round Top, Little Round Top, humble names, hence forward dear and famous; no lapse of time, no distance of space shall cause you to be forgotten. "The whole earth," said PERICLES, as he stood over the remains of his fellow-citizens who had fallen in the first year of the Peloponessian war, "the whole earth is the sepulchre of illustrious men." All time, he might have added, is the millennium of their glory. Surely I would do no injustice to the other noble achievements of the war, which have reflected such honor on both arms of the service, and have entitled the armies and the navy of the United States, their officers and men, to the warmest thanks and the richest rewards which a grateful people can pay. But they, I am sure, will join us in saying, as we bid farewell to the dust of these martyr-heroes, that wheresoever throughout the civilized world the accounts of this great warfare are read, and down to the latest period of recorded time, in the glorious annals of our common country, there will be no brighter page than that which relates THE BATTLES OF GETTYSBURGH.

THURSDAY, Nov. 19—P. M.

Early in the forenoon there was a further advance in Gold to 152¾@153 ₱ cent. on the Street, and the first sales at the Stock Exchange Board were 152¾@152½ ₱ cent. The additional rise was not sustained at the Second Board, when the price fell back to 151, the last quotation of Wednesday night. Still later in the day, on military rumors, of an adverse nature, the bidding returned to 152½ ₱ cent.

Although the Persia's news of the rise in Money to 6 ₱ cent. at the Bank of England was calculated to favor the belief that the export demand for Gold would immediately improve, this opinion was not strengthened by the appearances of the Foreign Bill market. Indeed, the London financial authorities themselves seem to treat the last advance of interest at the Bank as a matter of course, and the effect upon the Stock Exchange, particularly in Foreign Securities, including American, is represented to have been rather to steady than depress the market. The stock of Bullion in the Bank of England is £1,379,000 sterling, after the reduction of the week ending Nov. 4 of £638,000. Mr. SATTERTHWAITE, London Broker in American Stocks, writes that the market for Governments and Railways, without being active, closed rather firmer than the previous week. The following are the latest quotations, of Nov. 7:

There is increased ease in the supply of Money among the Stock Exchange Brokers today, and there is but little mercantile demand outside the regular facilities afforded for passing paper at Bank. Prime short paper is rather sought for than pressed upon the market at or within 7 ₱ cent. ₱ annum. Most of the Stock firms of established credit had as much or more Money voluntarily offered to them on loan at call than they were able to employ. There is no general abatement yet from the full price of 7 ₱ cent. Some loans are made in Government security at 6 ₱ cent.

The Treasury has made no further call upon the Associated Banks on the negotiation of Sept. 3, of which only $8,750,000 remains unpaid. The receipts into the Treasury to-day for the Popular Loan amount to $719,050, and for Customs, $340,000. The Banks, after paying the instalment on the Loan of Sept. 3 yesterday, held this morning of Legal Tender $22,708,000.

The Stock Market was firm at the early Board and most of the Railways ahead of the best quotations of last night. In the afternoon the prices were less firm, the general market closing at 4 o'clock as follows, in comparison with Wednesday P. M. There is no very decided feature in the speculation of the day. A good many parties who made themselves short through the recent pressure in Money continue to talk the market down, while others who believed that much buoyancy would follow the restoration of ease are scarcely satisfied with the progress of improvement. The main contest between Bull and Bear continues to centre on Erie Common Stock. The advantage to either party, for a day or two past, is not very marked:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

We have late and very important news from Gen. BURNSIDE'S Department this morning. The enemy Tuesday commenced an attack upon Gen. BURNSIDE'S position near Knoxville, and it seems that in the first encounter our troops, which were wholly composed of cavalry and mounted infantry, were compelled to yield, and fell back a short distance to a stronger position. Our loss was about one hundred, one-fourth of whom were killed. Among the wounded was Brig.-Gen. SANDERS. The dispatch further states that the enemy have completely invested the place, and that Gen. BURNSIDE will defend it to the last man. Every important point is fortified, and general confidence prevails that our forces will successfully hold the place.

We have received files of Richmond papers to the 16th, but they contain very little of interest. Several thousand National prisoners have been sent to Danville and Lynchburgh.

From the Army of the Potomac there is news of a slight skirmish, at Germanna Ford, between a small body of our cavalry and some of the enemy's infantry. The army is being paid off up to Nov. 1. Sutlers are still tabooed.

The steamship Creole arrived yesterday from New-Orleans, bringing dates to the 11th inst. Later information from the Teche District, concerning the attack on WASHBURN'S column, puts our loss in killed, wounded and prisoners at 677. The efficiency of our artillery was the means of preventing a very serious disaster, as the enemy outnumbered us more than five to one. We lost one piece of artillery. Nothing additional respecting the movements of Gen. BANKS' expeditionary force has come to hand.

From Chattanooga we have advices that the continued arrival of deserters renders it positive that LONGSTREET'S force is now making a movement against BURNSIDE, and that coöperation is expected from LEE'S army in Virginia.

FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Persia, at this port, from Liverpool, on the afternoon of the 7th inst., brings us two days, later advices. In addition to the destruction of the ship Bold Hunter, mentioned already announced, the American ship John Watt has been destroyed by the pirate Georgia, and we are told that shortly before the Georgia put into Cherbourg she boarded upward of ninety vessels. We may, therefore, soon expect to hear of more ravages upon our commerce. The application in Court of Exchequer for a new trial in the case of the gunboat Alexandra was granted on the ground of misdirection of the Judge, and the verdict of acquittal being in direct opposition to the evidence. In the matter of the ship Sir Robert Peel, whose seizure for alleged violation of the blockage of Matamoras, caused much stir in commercial circles, an agent has been dispatched by "Lloyd's Salvage Association," to inquire into the circumstances, and claim the ship and cargo. The blockade of Matamoras is now admitted to be effective by Paris authority, and a notice was posted in the Underwriters' Room at Liverpool advising no more shipments to that port. By order of the Government, whom rumor says, is a prospective customer for the Laird rams, the value of El Toussin has been fixed at £106,000, and the El Monnassir at £80,000. From the Continent, the most interesting news is the text of LOUIS NAPOLEON'S speech at the opening of the French Chambers. It is a document of more than ordinary length, and there appears to be some difficulty on the part of the journals in interpreting its meaning—some regarding it as being indicative of peace, and a minority as significant of the very reverse. The Polish question presents no new feature. Earl RUSSELL had addressed a note to the British Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, saying that the British Government did not wish to prolong the correspondence with the Russian Cabinet for the mere purpose of controversy, and a copy of the dispatch was given to Prince GORTSCHAKOFF. MAXIMILIAN it is thought will leave for his Kingdom of Mexico about the 1st of February prox.

GENERAL NEWS.

At a meeting of the Board of Aldermen yesterday, the Croton Aqueduct Board sent in a communication in regard to the construction of a storage reservoir in the valley of the Croton River. The subject was referred to a Special Committee, and Messrs. JEREMIAH, HARDY and OTTIWELL were appointed. The Comptroller sent in communications recommending transfers of $5,000 from the account of "Charities and Correction" to the City Inspector's Contingent Fund, and $10,000 from "Mount Morris-square" to "Lands and Places." The first proposed transfer was passed favorably, and the other was laid over. President WALSH gave notice that at the next meeting he should move to discharge the Special Committee on the subject of directing the Comptroller to pay the Hackley contract laborers the amount due them from such funds as the Comptroller holds to which Mr. HACKLEY'S assignees are entitled, because the Committee had not yet acted upon the matter, and some of the workmen were much in want of the sums owing to them. The Board adjourned to Monday at 1 o'clock P. M.

The Board of County Canvassers yesterday heard counsel for both Judges BOSWORTH and MCCUNN, on the question of permitting the supposed defective returns from the Tenth District of the Eighth Ward to be sent back for alteration and correction. Afterward the Board adopted a resolution requesting the Corporation Counsel to give his opinion whether it is their duty to send the returns back, and then adjourned to noon today. The Corporation Counsel was present and heard the arguments of the lawyers.

The report of the Commissioner of the Agricultural Department, for October, shows the Fall crops just down to be full average crops, both in amount and appearance. The condition of the fattening hogs in the western States is not as favorable as usual, owing to the prevalence of the hog cholera; the production of sorghum has fallen off three and a quarter million gallons, owing to the early frost; the value of frosted corn for fattening hogs and cattle is very small; the amount of old corn in the country is much reduced by the army demand for it during the Summer.

A private letter from a soldier in the Seventh Connecticut Volunteers, received at Hartford on Monday, says the Seventh Regiment, Col. HAWLEY, was under light marching orders for an assault on Fort Sumter.

The Montreal Advertiser has this paragraph: "We fear, from the indications we already notice, that the recent alleged conspiracy in Canada will tempt the Federal Government to violate the treaty which provides that neither Great Britain nor the United States shall have vessels-of-war on the lakes. The treaty limit is two revenue cruisers. Our Government should keep as close a watch on this matter as the alleged plot."

The Montreal Gazette of Tuesday makes the following statement of Mr. GIDDINGS' difficulties: On Sunday a capias was issued against the Hon. J. R. GIDDINGS, United States Consul-General for British North America, at the instance of WM. J. L. REDPATH. Mr. GIDDINGS entered bail for his appearance on the 28th of November before the Superior Court of Lower Canada, Messrs. HARRISON STEPHENS and IRA GOULD becoming his sureties in the sum of $25,000. This proceeding has been adopted, as our readers are aware, in consequence of the part Mr. GIDDINGS took in the "kidnapping case," which resulted in the forcible removal of REDPATH, in daylight, from Great St. James-street in this city, to American territory. REDPATH'S suit is for $20,000 damages.

In the Supreme Court Chambers yesterday, Judge INGRAHAM dissolved the injunction restaining JOHN KERR and others from running cars over a portion of the track of the Sixth-avenue Railroad Company.

Gen. SANDERS, reported severely wounded in the fighting yesterday, is Chief of Cavalry in Gen. BURNSIDE'S department, and ranks as Captain in the Sixth United States cavalry.

Gov. PARKER has declined to call an extra session of the New-Jersey Legislature.

A brisk business was transacted in Breadstuffs, yesterday, chiefly on speculation, Flour advancing 5c.@10c. ₱ bbl.; Wheat, 2c.@3c.; Corn and Oats, 1c.@1½c. ₱ bushel. Provisions were also quite active, having been freely purchased by speculators, at higher rates. Cotton was quiet; Whisky, dull and heavy. Freights were moderately active. Other branches of trade presented no remarkable alterations.

The price of Gold rose to 152½ ₱ cent. yesterday. Stocks firm in the forenoon, but only steady at the close. Money easy.

Orations of Everett and Beecher.

We devote a broadside of this morning's TIMES to the publication of two orations which we are sure will command the attention of the day. And not of this day only. Elaborate and finished discourses from two such men as EDWARD EVERETT and HENRY WARD BEECHER, upon topics of such great National interest as those they discuss, will not lightly be passed over, much less ignored altogether, by any intelligent citizen. Mr. EVERETT'S theme is the "Battle of Gettysburgh," and the occasion is the dedication of that historic field as a National Cemetery. Mr. BEECHER'S discourse was upon his recent tour in Great Britain—his experiences there, and his views as regards British feeling and policy toward this country.

These orations from two masters of oratory, delivered on the same day, but upon such different topics—one historical and domestic, the other practical and foreign—admit of little comparison. Mr. EVERETT'S oration is, of course, classical and ornate in its diction, felicitous in illustration, well-wrought and strong in its logic, correct and explicit in its statement; in a word, it is eloquent, in the best sense of that much-abused term. His exordium is of great beauty; and his peroration is splendid. If we might offer a single point of criticism on the oration, it would be upon that part of it, constituting one-half of its body, which gives a narrative of the marches, manœuvres, skirmishes and strategy of Gens. HOOKER and LEE, Gens. PLEASONTON and STUART, from the time at which the two armies left the opposite banks of the Rappahannock until they confronted each other on this side of the Potomac, and also the detailed account of the preliminaries of the battle, and of the action itself. Mr. EVERETT enters into a very minute statement of these things; and the elaborateness of the details, the large number of names, places and circumstances he has occasion to recall, will tend to confuse and repel those who are less familiar with the events than himself, and crowd out those "glittering generalities" which he or any other great orator might be expected mainly to deal in on such an occasion. It may be said that these things were dwelt upon, as the oration is intended and expected to be enduring and historical; but so also will be the reports of Gens. MEADE and LEE, from which the facts are largely drawn. After he gets through with this, however, Mr. EVERETT does justice to his subject and himself.

Mr. BEECHER'S very eloquent and effective oration will command no less attention than the oration of Mr. EVERETT. Great and national as has been his reputation as a speaker previously, that reputation has been largely magnified by his efforts on the other side of the sea. The English critics, who make such severe demands upon a public speaker, were taken captive by the American preacher; and the echoes of his resounding eloquence found a no less appreciative and delighted auditory in his own country. His speech last night was equal to his best efforts in England; indeed in logical connection, force and brilliancy, it was superior to any of his heretofore published speeches. His analysis of British sentiment and character did as perfect justice to the British people as his defence of America did justice thereto in England. The speech, however, will be universally read throughout the land, and every one can give vent and form to his own admiration.

CAVALRY, SOUTH AND NORTH.—An article recently published in Richmond on the Confederate cavalry, says that the cavalry arm of their service has recently become an "object of distrust, if not of contempt," and admits the great superiority and higher effectiveness of the Northern cavalry. It was of their cavalry that the rebels boasted loudest during the first year of the war. The ferocious Southern horsemen, the centaurs of the Southwest, were to trample down the greasy mechanics, small-fisted farmers, and mudsills generally, like weeds in their path. They were to ravage and play havoc all around. We in the North were inclined to tacitly admit the rebel superiority in this branch, and kept rather quiet about our cavalry at first, though there were some things, like TOMPKINS' charge through Fairfax Court-house, and ZAGONYI'S charge at Springfield, of which we felt justly proud. But two years have made a very great change. We have now a splendid body of cavalry, though not nearly as powerful as it ought to be; and during the bygone Summer and Autumn, they have met the rebels in a hundred fights of varying magnitude, from the great battle in June on the Rappahannock, down to hand-to-hand encounters between a half-dozen men, and in nearly every one of these actions the rebels have been worsted, as has been shown from time to time in the thrilling "Cavalry Record" of our correspondent, Mr. PAUL, and as the rebels themselves have at last reluctantly confessed. And now they are forced to own that the Southern cavalry, whose exploits were to be so terrible, have become an "object of distrust, if not of contempt."

The Situation in East Tennessee.

The news from East Tennessee this morning is late and important. There seems to be no doubt but that the rebels are operating in considerable force against BURNSIDE from the Southwest, and that this force is a part of BRAGG'S army, detached for that especial purpose, and commanded, probably, by LONGSTREET. The dispatch speaks of the advance of the enemy as being made by the Kingston Road. Kingston, like Knoxville, is on the north bank of the Tennessee, but owing to a great bend in the river lies almost due west from the latter place, and distant about fifty miles. We have had no account of its occupation by the rebels, and they have probably avoided it, as it is too far to the left of their line. It now seems that the rebels, after compelling our troops to evacuate Loudon, on the river, thirty-five miles southwest of Knoxville, two weeks ago, crossed at that place and moved upon Knoxville, following the line of the railroad and bringing up supplies via Cleveland, Tenn. Knoxville has been the headquarters of Gen. BURNSIDE ever since he entered East Tennessee, and it is reported to be strongly fortified. It should not surprise any one if some of the ground in that section is yielded when threatened by a heavy force. Gen. BURNSIDE has been clearing out and occupying a district of country two hundred miles long by nearly one hundred broad, and his troops have been necessarily widely scattered. Sudden concentration is, therefore, a matter of supreme necessity, and some points heretofore held must be temporarily abandoned.

But in view of Gen. GRANT'S position and strength at Chattanooga, this movement appears to be not only bold, but hazardous to the enemy. Their force, although distant, is directly upon the left flank of Gen. THOMAS' army, and now north of the Tennessee. For the time being, it cuts off the possibility of Gen. BURNSIDE forming any junction with THOMAS, but if our leaders at Chattanooga know, as they ought to know, the strength of the enemy thus detaching itself from the main body, the movement ought to result very disastrously to the rebels, even though BURNSIDE might suffer temporarily.

Gen. SHERMAN'S forces have undoubtedly been added to those of Gen. THOMAS, and our total strength at and near Chattanooga must certainly be superior to that of the enemy. Such a bold and independent movement as this against BURNSIDE, therefore, by a detachment of the force in front of Chattanooga, can hardly be allowed to pass without counter movements on our part.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Thurday, Nov. 19.

OPERATIONS OF A BAND OF ROBBERS.

On Saturday afternoon a gang of rebel guerrillas, two miles from Vienna, on the Fairfax road, captured the following citizens of Fairfax County: D. C. SPEAR, RICHARD BARSTOW, and MRS. MOCSIN, of Falls Church, who was returning from market, at Fairfax; C. H. SHIPMAN, JARVIS WRIGHT, SAMUEL WILLIAMS (colored) and some sutlers. The guerrillas were dressed in United States uniforms, under which they wore Confederate uniforms. They took whatever of value they found upon the captives. From one of the sutlers they took three hundred dollars in greenbacks, seven hundred dollars' worth of goods, consisting of buckskin gloves and shirts, and also his horses and harness. The Star says: "It will scarcely be credited that this gang of shirt-stealing highwaymen is made up of young men of the leading families of that part of the State. Among them were John Thomas, a son of the State Senator of Fairfax; French Delaney, son of Col. Delaney, of Gov. Pierrepont's Staff; Lieut. Spindle, son of Addison Spindle, near Centreville; De Butts, of Loudon County; Lycurgus Hutchinson, of Green Springs, and Saunders, of Fox Mills.

THE SUPPLIES FOR OUR PRISONERS.

A dispatch was received here to-day from NEAL DOW in Richmond that forty-eight thousand rations sent by our Government for the relief of our prisoners, had been landed from the steamer and were being distributed. The refusal of the rebel authorities to receive them arose from a misapprehension or a misuse of a word. The request for permission to land commissary stores was either actually written or understood to be "commissaries." The rebel Government refused to let any such officers enter Richmond; but on the explanation that that phraseology was intended to describe food, they consented to the reception and distribution of the rations.

SENT INTO EXILE.

WM. T. SMITHSON, broker, tried for holding treasonable correspondence with rebels, was sent away by the morning train under guard, in pursuance of the finding of a Court-martial.

AN EFFORT IN BEHALF OF THE SHACKLED PRESS.

DISPATCHES TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Nov. 19.

THE NEW TREASURY NOTE ISSUE.

By the act of March 3, 1863, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue $400,000,000 in Treasury notes, running not longer than three years and bearing interest at a rate not higher than six per cent., which he can make a legal tender for the face value. Under this authority, fifty millions of the two years notes, at five per centum interest, payable every six months, were negotiated with the associated banks of the three cities, on the 8th of September last. These notes are to be a legal tender for their face. If paid out by the banks, they will, to a great degree, operate as an equivalent increase of the currency. Plates have already been prepared for the issue of one year notes at the same rate of interest, payable at maturity, with the principal—which notes are also legal tender. But no decision has yet been arrived at as to their issue. The aggregate amount of United States Legal Tender notes which the Secretary has been authorized by the various acts of Congress to issue absolutely is $400,000,000. All this amount has been issued. He has beside conditional authority to issue $50,000,000 more for the redemption of temporary loans, should it become necessary to do so. The abovementioned facts were obtained on inquiry from an authentic source.

ILLNESS OF ADMIRAL SHUBRICK.

Admiral SHUBRICK fell suddenly ill on Friday night, and before any, excepting his most intimate friends were aware of it, his case assumed a serious aspect under the treatment of his physicians; he has rallied, and is now pronounced out of danger, though requiring great care. He entered the navy in 1806, and though on the retired list by the operation of the law of 1861, he has been continued in active service, and is now President of the Light House Board.

DECREES OF CONFISCATION.

The United States District Court at Alexandria, Judge UNDERWOOD presiding, ordered yesterday, decrees of confiscation and sale against the property of thirteen persons, including Capt. FRENCH FORREST, late of the United States navy.

SENTENCES BY COURT-MARTIAL.

The Court-martial, of which Gen. SLOUGH was President, and Major GAINES, Judge-Advocate, was dissolved to-day. Its findings in the following cases are officially announced: ISAAC FREDERICK MCCARTER, found guilty of stealing $46,000 of Government money, and sentenced to five years in the Penitentiary at Albany; Capt. J. W. HOWLAND, A. Q. M., convicted of stealing $16,400, sentenced to be cashiered, compelled to refund the money, and confined five years in Albany; Capt. CHERRI M. LEVY, A. Q. M., convicted of signing a false certificate of pay of men under his command, cashiered, compelled to refund, and be forever disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust in the United States.

AFFAIRS IN FRANCE.

The Emperor's Speech—Opening of the Chambers—The Emperor Reaffirms his Neutrality.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Nov. 6, 1863.

Yesterday the Emperor delivered his anxiously looked for speech at the opening of the Chambers, and the public are naturally absorbed to-day in its consideration. By general consent the speech is colorless and meaningless—the mountain has given birth to a mouse.

His Majesty did not think enough of the American question to refer to it at all. As a political question it no longer occupies his attention. The fact is, a caricature published by the Charivari this morning, exactly sums up the situation. In the back-ground a National and a Confederate are fighting; in the foreground stands Europe, turning her back to the combatants, with the words, "You tire me with your war; I am going to leave you; please send me no more bulletins."

On the Mexican question His Majesty throws no new light. We already knew that he was trying to get MAXIMILIAN on the new throne, and this speech does not tell us by what means he hopes to obtain that result, nor what are the chances of his obtaining it. But the Emperor does himself justice in abandoning in this connection the farce of fighting for an idea, for he tells us plainly that this Expedition, "commenced to avenge our honor, will terminate by the triumph of our interests."

On the question of Poland His Majesty resorts to the miserable subterfuge of waving before people's eyes an European Congress. This European Congress in all times past has been the hobby of all diplomats who did not know what else to say: and one would have supposed that NAPOLEON, if for nothing else than the vindication of his widespread reputation for initiative, would have found a better cloak for the embarrassments of his position than this worn-out affair.

The only salient, the only pointed, the only logical paragraph in the speech is that which demands the abrogation of the treaties of 1815. These treaties have been torn and trampled under foot by everybody; they are only an incubus on diplomacy; for evil-disposed nations they serve as a refuge, while for generous ones they are no barrier, and, therefore, if they are a dead-letter under one circumstance they ought to be under all. But can NAPOLEON obtain a Congress for this purpose? The thing is doubtful. The fact is, he cuts out so much work for his ideal Congress that it will require a sort of European Parliament sitting en permanence to accomplish it all.

It was anticipated that His Majesty would say something about the late election and the powerful Opposition which has just entered the Chamber. But he confines himself to this immense fib "Notwithstanding some local dissidences I can only applaud the result of the elections." The Constitutionnel says His Majesty's speech will have an immense echo in the country; if the imperialist paper referred to this extract it will be within the truth. Only the echo will be transformed into an immense laugh.

His Majesty said also: "You have all taken from me the same oath; it assures me of your support." But the leaders of the old parties among the new Deputies—Messrs. BERRYER, MARIE, THIERS, and others, were not present, so that this part of the speech, prepared beforehand, did not hit the men it was aimed at, and therefore lost its effect. The absent members will take the oath to-day at the bar of the Chamber, and thus His Majesty will have been cheated out of this very small triumph. In more remote periods gentlemen of such a recalcitrant turn of mind would not have escaped the vengeance of the imperial wrath. But His Majesty is "satisfied with the result of the election," and need not take to heart these small manœuvres of the enemy.

As a whole the speech of the Emperor creates no new position which need interest the United States. The doctrine of non-intervention and of strict neutrality is to-day, as it has always been, the doctrine of the Government, and as it will be to the end of the war. As regards Mexico the Government is seeking to get rid of a bad bargain as cheaply and as honorably as possible, and the speech does not engage the Government in any thing.

But there is one consideration, growing out of the general situation of the moment, which merits all your attention, and that is this: NAPOLEON is seeking to renew his former friendly relations with Russia, while England is gradually floating away from her alliance with France. This is the opinion of all who, at this point, observe closely the march of events, and it is of the utmost importance that our own statesmen should keep their eyes on the progress of this extraordinary change of front. Two months ago I told you that this transformation had commenced, that NAPOLEON was at the feet of GORTSCHAKOFF, and, like the faithful dog, was caressing the hand that struck him. NAPOLEON perhaps is not to blame for this; Russia is the colossus which is soon to govern the destinies of the Continent, and NAPOLEON looks alone to the perpetuation of his dynasty. It is this that molds and gives form to his policy, and it would be a most fatal error to quarrel with Russia if he stood alone.

The opening of the Chambers took place with the usual pomp at the new Salle d'Etat in the Louvre. The Annamite (Cochin Chinese) Embassy were present, and after the termination of the proceedings they were conducted to the Tuileries, where, for the first time, they were received by the Emperor. These odd-looking children of the Orient had a grand success—as curiosities.

I believe I may state that in a late official document from the French to the American Government, the latter is assured of the intention of the Emperor to continue in his present policy of neutrality in the affairs of the United States.

TWO DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE PERSIA.

Louis Napoleon's Speech on Opening the French Chambers.

The Royal mail steamship Persia, Capt. LOTT, which sailed from Liverpool at 3:30 on the afternoon of the 7th, and from Queenstown on the 8th inst., arrived here yesterday morning.

[In consequence of the pressure on our columns, details of the European news are excluded this morning. In our "News of the Day" column a summary of the more interesting points will be found.—ED.]

The French Legislature was opened by the Emperor in person on the 5th instant. We have already given a brief synopsis of the Emperor's speech.

Its significance and importance calls for the publication of the full text, which is as follows:

"MESSIEURS LES SENATEURS, MESSIEURS LES DEPUTIES:

The annual assembling of the great bodies of the State is always a happy opportunity, which brings together men devoted to the public welfare, and permits the manifestation of the truth to the country. The freedom of our mutual communications calms anxieties and strengthens my resolutions. I give you, then, welcome. The Legislative Body has been renewed the third time since the foundation of the Empire, and for the third time, in spite of some local disagreements, I have only to applaud the result of the elections. You have all taken to me the same oath. It answers for your concurrence. Our duty is to do the business of the country promptly and well, resting faithful to the Constitution which has given us eleven years of prosperity, and which you have sworn to maintain.

The exposé of the situation at home will show you that, in spite of the forced stagnation of labor in certain branches, progress has not slackened. Our industry has contended with advantage against foreign competition, and the fears excited by the treaty of commerce with England have vanished before undeniable facts. Our exports in the first eight months of the year 1863, compared with those of the corresponding months of the year 1862, have increased by 233,000,000f. During the same period the movement of maritime navigation has surpassed the figures of the preceding epoch by 175,000 tons, 136,000 of which were under the French flag. The abundant harvest of this year is a blessing of Providence which ought to insure a cheaper subsistence to the population. It also places beyond doubt the prosperity of our agriculture. Public works have been pursued with activity. About 1,000 kilometres of new railway lines have been opened. Our ports, our rivers, our canals, our roads have continued to be improved. The session having commenced sooner than usual, the report of the Minister of Finance has not yet been published. It will be shortly. You will see from it that, if our hopes are not completely realized, the revenue has followed an ascending course, and that, without extraordinary resources, we have met the expenses occasioned by the wars in Mexico and Cochin China.

I ought to point out to you several reforms which have been considered opportune, among others the decrees relative to the liberty of the baking trade; that which makes the maritime inscription less onerous to the population of the coasts; the project which modifies the law as to coalitions; and that which suppresses exclusive privileges for theatres. I ought also equally to direct your attention to a law intended to increase the powers of the general and communal councils, and to remedy the excess of centralization; in short, to simplify administrative formalities, to soften legislation applicable to classes worthy of all our solicitude. In this there will be a progress with which you will desire to associate yourselves.

You will also have to occupy yourselves with the question of sugar, which requires to be finally settled by a more solid legislation. The project submitted to the Council of the State has for its object to grant indigenous produce the facility of export which sugars coming from abroad enjoy.

A law as to registration will abolish the double decime, and will replace that sur-tax by a more just imposition.

In Algeria, in spite of the anomaly which subjects the same population, the one to the civil power, the other to the military power, the Arabs have understood how much the French domination is restorative and equitable, without the Europeans having had less confidence in the protection of the Government. Our ancient colonies have seen the barriers restricting their transactions disappear; but circumstances have not been favorable to the development of commerce.

The recent establishment of institutions of credit will, I hope, bring about the amelioration of their condition.

In the midst of these material cares, nothing that concerns religion, the mind, and morality has been neglected. Religious works of benevolence, the arts, the sciences, and public instruction have received numerous encouragements, since 1848 the population at school has increased by one-fourth. To-day nearly five millions of children (a third gratuitously) are received in the primary schools, but our efforts ought not to slacken, seeing that 600,000 are still deprived of instruction. An impulse has been given to high-class studies in secondary schools, where special education is being reorganized. Such is, gentlemen, the summary of what we have already done, and what we wish still to do.

Assuredly the prosperity of our country will make more rapid progress if political preoccupations did not trouble it; but in the life of nations unforeseen and inevitable events happen, which ought to be looked at without fear, and supported without weakness. Of this number are the American war, the forced occupation of Mexico and Cochin China, the insurrection in Poland. Distant expeditions, the object of so many criticisms, have not been the execution of a premeditated plan; the force of events has brought them about, and they are, notwithstanding, not to be regretted. How in effect develop our external commerce if, on the one hand, we renounce all influence in America; and if, on the other, in the presence of the vast territories occupied by the Spaniards and the Dutch, France alone remained without possessions in the seas of Asia? We have conquered in Cochin China a position, which, without tying us down to the difficulties of local government, will permit us to develop the immense resources of those countries and civilize them by commerce.

In Mexico, after an unexpected resistance, which the courage of our soldiers and sailors has overcome, we have seen the population receive us as liberators. Our efforts will not have been in vain, and we will be largely recompensed for our sacrifices, when the destinies of this country, which will owe to us its regeneration, will have been placed in the hands of a Prince whose intelligence and qualifications render him worthy of so noble a mission. Have, then, faith in our enterprises beyond the sea. Commenced to avenge our honor, they will terminate by the triumph of our interests; and if prejudiced minds do not discern how much fertility is contained in the seeds planted for the future, do not let us deface the glory acquired, so to speak, at the two extremities of the world—at Pekin, and at Mexico.

The Polish question demands more explanation. When the insurrection in Poland broke out, the Governments of Russia and France were on the best terms. Since the peace the grand European questions have found them in agreement, and I do not hesitate to declare it. During the Italian war, as at the time of the annexation of Nice and Savoy, the Emperor has given me the most sincere and most cordial support. This good understanding demanded caution, and it has been necessary for me to believe the Polish cause very popular in France, so as not to hesitate to compromise one of the first alliances of the Continent, and to raise my voice in favor of a nation rebellious in the eyes of Russia, but in ours the heirs have a right inscribed in history and in treaties. Nevertheless, the question touched the most important European interests. It could not be treated singly by France. An offence to our honor or a menace to our frontiers only impose upon us the duty of acting without previous concert. It became thus necessary, as at the epoch of the events of the East and of Syria, to come to an understanding with the powers which had to pronounce upon reasons and rights like our own. The Polish insurrection, upon which its duration impressed a national character, awakened sympathies everywhere; and the object of diplomacy was to draw to this cause as many adhesions as possible, in order to weigh upon Russia with all the weight of the opinion of Europe. This almost unanimous concurrence of desires appeared to us the most proper means to persuade the Cabinet of St. Petersburg.

Unhappily our disinterested counsels have been interpreted as an intimidation, and the course of England, Austria and France, in place of putting a stop to the conflict, has only embittered it. On both sides excesses are committed which, in the name of humanity, are equally to be deplored. What remains to be done? Are we reduced to the single alternative of war or silence? No. Without rushing to arms, and without being silent, one means remains to us. That is to submit the Polish cause to a European tribunal. Russia has already declared that a conference, in which all the other questions which agitate Europe would be discussed, would in nothing wound its dignity. Let us take note of this declaration. May it serve to extinguish, once for all, the fermentations of discord ready to burst out on all sides; and from the very disquiet of Europe, everywhere agitated by the elements of dissolution, may there spring up a new era of order and peace. Is not the moment come to reconstruct upon a new basis the edifice ruined by time and destroyed piece by piece by revolutions? Is it not urgent to reorganize, by new conventions, what is irrevocably accomplished, and to accomplish by common agreement, what the peace of the world demands? The treaties of 1815 have ceased to exist. The force of things has overturned them, or tends to overturn them. Almost everywhere they have been broken—in Greece, in Belgium, in France, in Italy, as upon the Danube. Germany agitates to change them; England has generously modified them by the session of the Ionian Islands, and Russia tramples them under foot at Warsaw. In the midst of this successive rending of the fundamental European pact violent passions are excited, and at the South as at the North powerful interests demand a solution. What, then, more legitimate and more sensible than to assemble the Powers of Europe in a Congress where self-interest and resistance would disappear before a supreme arbitration? What more conformable to the ideas of the epoch, to the wishes of the greatest number, than to address the conscience, the reason of statesmen of all countries, and say to them 'The prejudices, the grudges which divide us, have they not already lasted too long? Shall the jealous rivalries of the Great Powers hinder forever the progress of civilization? Shall we always cherish mutual distrust by exaggerated armaments? Should the most precious resources be indefinitely exhausted in a vain display of our forces? Shall we eternally maintain a state which is neither peace with security nor war with its happy chances? Let us no longer give a factitious importance to the subversive spirit of extreme parties, in opposing by narrow calculations the legitimate aspirations of the people. Let us have the courage to substitute for a diseased and precarious condition a stable and regular situation, although it should cost us sacrifices. Let us meet together without a preconceived system, without exclusive ambition, animated by the single thought of establishing an order of things founded henceforth on the well understood interest of Sovereigns and peoples?' This appeal, I like to believe, will be understood by all; a refusal would cause us to suppose the existence of secret projects which shun the light of day. But although the proposition should not be unanimously agreed to, it would have the immense advantage of having indicated to Europe where is its danger, where is its safety. Two paths are open. The one conducts to progress by civilization and peace, the other sooner or later leads fatally to war, by the obstinate maintenance of a past which is crumbling away.

You know now, gentlemen, the language which I propose to hold to Europe. Approved by you, with the sanction of public assent, it cannot fail to be listened to, since I speak in the name of France!"

Board of County Canvassers.

COUNSEL HEARD IN M'CUNN'S CASE.

The County Canvassers met at 10 o'clock, yesterday morning, and the matter of the returns from the Tenth District of the Eighth Ward was immediately brought up. Anticipation of an interesting discussion upon it had attracted a crowd of spectators larger than the room would accommodate, so that, when it was well filled, the Sergeant-at-Arms guarded the door against the further incoming of any persons but those connected with the Board. Of those in attendance, there was a good sprinkling of politicians, including Ex-Mayor WOOD and his brother BENJAMIN, CHARLES S. SPENCER, Alderman MCCOOL and others of minor political importance, besides counsel to represent both Judges BOSWORTH and MCCUNN. Messrs. BURRILL, JOHN GRAHAM and WM. C. NOYES appeared for Judge BOSWORTH, and Messrs. CLINTON and LEVI S. CHATFIELD for Judge MCCUNN.

There was considerable discussion on the question of hearing counsel. A motion having been made to send back the returns for correction of an informality, which consisted in the vote for Judge WHITE being expressed in numerals only, without being written out as well, Mr. GRAHAM desired to enter upon a discussion of the propriety of allowing such a motion.

Mr. TWEED objected to interruptions by any one but a member of the Board, till permission should be given to hear counsel.

Mr. GRAHAM explained that he had ventured his remarks because the motion involved the vital principle he wished to be heard upon. He would, if permitted to speak at length, show that the Board had no right to send back a return except for the correction of clerical errors palpable on its face. In this case he would show that the alleged informality was only a deviation from the forms of law, which could not be construed into an error requiring correction.

The Chairman (Mr. LITTLE) ruled the motion out of order, on the ground that the Board had no right to send back returns for correction.

The discussion on the question of hearing counsel then continued, and finally it was decided by a vote of eight to three to hear them, and to send for the Corporation Counsel to be present during the controversy. Mr. DEVLIN was accordingly sent for, and while awaiting his coming counsel disputed as to which side should have the affirmative, which would give the right to open and close the argument. The ingeniousness of each side in putting the question so that each claimed this right proved quite amusing. At last, after waiting an half hour in vain for Mr. DEVLIN, Supervisor STEWART, for the purpose of getting the counsel to work, moved to complete the canvass, as the returns were already sent in. This gave the affirmative on the question to Judge BOSWORTH'S counsel, and Mr. GRAHAM began his argument, and had been speaking but a short time when Mr. DEVLIN entered the room. He addressed the Board for an hour and a half with much force and eloquence. Beginning with a review of the creation and power and duties of the Board, he proceeded to say that the decision was not final in any case, but was prima facie evidence of facts which they declared and certified. There remained afterward the test by quo warranto. The returns in question were perfect on their face, and the Board could not know anything different than what was presented to them by the District Canvassers, in relation to the results of the election, unless by unofficial information, even their personal knowledge of fraud was of no avail; the returns must be counted as presented, and no alteration was permissible except to correct an informality that was apparent, or a clerical error, such as a mistake; but in no case could the alteration or correction by law be permitted to change the result upon its first rendering. He resumed at great length and quoted copiously of decisions that if the form of returns were correct the results stated must be accepted and counted as first rendered. His main line of argument, however, was to show that the Board possessed not a jot of judicial power; that they were not Judges at all, but merely counters; that their work was only and absolutely in audition and subtraction and a declaration of results. In support of the reasonableness and justice of this view he laid stress upon the fact that the Board were not granted any power on judicial bodies or bodies having purely judicial prerogatives, such as authority to command attendance of persons and papers, and to administer oaths and take testimony. The District Canvassers could ignore their request or demand for their attendance and be guilty of no contumacy to them in a legal point of view. He presumed that Judge MCCUNN'S counsel would present as one argument in opposition to the motion, the fact that he had received votes in every district in the City but this. He did not wish to reflect upon the canvassers, for he did not know them, but as a fair cause of argument he could suppose that MCCUNN'S supporters, knowing that his race would be hotly contested, had purposely caused one set of returns to be imperfect, in order to be enabled to give him the majority requisite for his election in case the result should be narrowed down to the matter of a few votes. In this view, setting aside the legal rights in the case, and looking at it only in a moral aspect, there was a great principle at stake—the danger of fixing a perilous precedent; for, if the returns should be sent back, unscrupulous politicians would hereafter know how to provide for the contingency of a close vote, in order to count a particular man into office, and such a precedent would often make the County Canvassers the medium of legalizing dishonor.

Mr. CLINTON followed in opposition. He confined himself principally to a refutation

Meeting of Shipwrights.

A large meeting of shipwrights was held at Cooper Institute last evening, to take into consideration the question of an increase of wages. Mr. THOS. DAY presided. There was a determination evinced to adhere firmly to a demand for an increase.

The following resolution was read and adopted, and after several speeches by intelligent mechanics, who advocated the necessity of strict union, the proceedings wound up at a late hour:

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, The prices of the necessaries of life have increased to an extent unsurpassed in the history of our country, so that the present income of the workingman fails to meet the requirements of his family; and,

Whereas, Our fellow-workmen, the alongshore shipwrights, have demanded of their employers an increase of their present rate of wages, and this reasonable demand not having been complied with, they have been compelled to suspend work; and,

Whereas, The master shipwrights, while individually acknowledging the justice of this demand, have combined for the purpose of frustrating the efforts of the workingmen to obtain a reasonable increase in the rate of wages; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the shipwrights of New-York and vicinity, in mass meeting assembled, deeply sympathize with and cordially indorse the action of our fellow workmen, the alongshore shipwrights.

Resolved, That we will by every honorable means in our power, cooperate with our fellow-shipwrights in their efforts to accomplish the just and reasonable objects they have in view, and we call upon the master-shipwrights, as they value their reputation for justice and humanity, to comply with the reasonable demands of their employes.

Resolved, That we, as mechanics and honorable men, do hereby pledge ourselves to sustain our fellow shipwrights by pecuniary assistance, if necessary, to the extent of one-half of our present earnings.

Postmaster Wakeman.

A painful rumor was current yesterday to the effect that Hon. ABRAM WAKEMAN, Postmaster, had died early in the morning. The rumor, it will gratify the public to know, was incorrect. Mr. WAKEMAN has been quite ill, but is recovering, and was able, yesterday, to take a drive with his family.

ARREST OF A "DEAD RABBIT."—JOHN REARDON, President of the "Dead Rabbit" association, was arrested yesterday for a felonious assault upon Officer MAHONEY, of the Sixth Precinct. He was also arrested on a second warrant for a brutal and unprovoked assault upon another party. REARDON, some time since, resigned as a policeman to avoid being turned out. He was indicted for a felonious assault—firing three shots at a man—was allowed to plead guilty to a simple assault before McCUNN, who fined him six cents.

FATAL AFFRAY.—About 1½ o'clock yesterday morning, an affray occurred in front of No. 87 Walker-street, between three Italian musicians and some Germans—the latter making the assault—in the course of which a German named JOHN STUNN was fatally stabbed by VINCENT DE NEBILLO, an Italian. The latter was arrested, but the Coroner's jury rendered a verdict that he had acted in self-defence.

BEATEN BY A STAGE-DRIVER.—The jury on the inquest, in the matter of the death of HUGH CLANCEY, particulars of which were published yesterday, have rendered a verdict of death by violence at the hands of PHILIP SMITH, the stage-driver, who was held to bail in $1,000.

Coughs and Colds.—Those who are suffering from Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, &c., should try BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES, a simple remedy, which has relieved thousands, and which is in almost every case effectual.

Morton's Gold Pens are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in another column.

Chloasma, or Moth Patches.

Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly on blondes than on brunettes, but they contribute greatly to marring the beauty on either, and anything that will remove Moth Patches without injuring the skin in texture or color, would no doubt be considered a great achievement in medical science. Dr. B. C. PERRY, having devoted his whole time and attention to Diseases of the Skin, will guarantee to remove Moth Patches, Freckles, and other discolorations from the face without injury to either texture or color of the skin. His success in this, as in other branches of his specialty—DISEASES OF THE SCALP and LOSS OF HAIR—will warrant him in guaranteeing a CURE IN EVERY CASE. AGAIN NEW TESTIMONY.

READ.

HARLEM, July 30, 1863.

I have been deaf for over TWENTY-FIVE YEARS, and Dr. VON EISENBERG operated on both of my ears without the slightest pain—a thing that I could not believe could be done. I now hear well, and feel as I never felt for the last twenty years. The dexterity and skill with which the operation was performed evince the highest practical ability. I hear perfectly. It is now over a month since the operation, and I continue to feel as well as ever.

CATARRH CURED.

NEW-YORK, Aug. 23, 1863.

I have been suffering for the last three years from a severe Catarrh, with a continual dullness in my head, a tightness across my chest, a weight over my eyes, which were weak, watery and very painful. My nostrils were continually obstructed with a pouring of fluid. I have had frequent sneezing, hoarseness of my voice, generally attended with spitting, often with a fullness of my throat, together with a soreness and a dropping. Dr. VON EISENBERG has cured me of all these disagreeable sufferings. I now feel a new life. The treatment of Dr. VON EISENBERG is as skillful as it is successful; it is impossible to overrate the benefit I have received at his hands. I heartily recommend any one suffering like myself to place themselves under Dr. VON EISENBERG'S care, with a certainty of being speedily cured. I give this with gratitude and pleasure. I cannot forbear again saying that my voice, which was hoarse and thick when I applied to Dr. VON EISENBERG, is now clear and good; indeed, I feel abundantly satisfied.

JAMES LITTLE,
No. 245 7th-st., New-York.

NEW-YORK, Sept. 8.

I have been suffering for years past from a severe Catarrh, with a great heaviness over my eyes, with a severe depression, great uneasiness, and pain in my head, great difficulty in breathing, and a continual accumulation in my nostrils, which gave me restless nights for several years. I have consulted several physicians, who pronounced me to be consumptive. What I suffered for so long a time is indescribable. My system was entirely disarranged and greatly debilitated. I not only felt weak, but I had a cloud continually before my eyes, and my ears were so affected that I was threatened with a total loss of hearing. I must say, I think, I was guided by Providence to come to Dr. Von Eisenberg, who not only cured me of my Catarrh by removing an astonishing quantity of disagreeable matter from my head, but he restored me to perfect health, a blessing I have not enjoyed for many years. Now I enjoy a good night's rest, and pursue my business with comfort. I must acknowledge that Dr. Von Eisenberg's mild and scientific treatment for Catarrh deserves the highest commendation, as the principle which directs his system of curing Catarrh is such as to render success certain.

JAMES FURLONG, No. 556 2d-av.

No. 174 ALLEN-ST., NEW-YORK, Feb. 9, 1863.

I have been completely deaf in one ear, and partially so in the other, for above seventeen years, with a disagreeable discharge from both ears, combined with continual rumbling noise in the head, for which I have been treated by a most eminent practitioner in the City without the slightest relief.

Consulted Dr. Von Eisenberg, but I must candidly say that I had no faith in his success when I did so. It is, therefore, due to Dr. Von Eisenberg to acknowledge that I am entirely cured; also, that he displayed that skill and knowledge which have procured for him such an unrivaled reputation. As I have had an opportunity of comparing his mode of treatment with that of others, I can truly state that it is not only superior, but the principles which direct his mode of restoring the hearing are, in my opinion, certain.

JOHN TAYLOR.

NEW-YORK, July 19, 1862.

This certifies that my mother has been for some time afflicted with partial deafness, suffering from pain, and rumbling noises in the head, together with other indications of a total loss of hearing. Dr. Von Eisenberg removed from her ears a great quantity of matter, together with coagulated blood, relieving her instantaneously, and all without pain. It is with grateful thanks that I give this testimony to his skill.

CARROLL J. POST, No. 28 South-st.

SIGHT RESTORED.

JUNE 25, 1863.

My daughter brought me to Dr. VON EISENBERG almost completely blind in both eyes. I could not bear the pain nor the light. I am completely cured by Dr. VON EISENBERG, and called now to express my gratitude to the Doctor for his skill and unremitting attention, by which I recovered one of the most precious senses to me after being deprived of it for four years. It is only due to Dr. VON EISENBERG to state that I have tried several physicians in vain. I shall be happy to bear personal testimony to Dr. VON EISENBERG'S unrivaled success to any lady or gentleman who will call on me.

CHRONIC CATARRH CURED.
READ.

NEW-YORK, March 20, 1863.

"This is to certify, that I have suffered from very severe CHRONIC CATARRH, with a dull heaviness in the head. I felt my nose completely stopped up accompanied by continual soreness of the throat, the chills stealing over me with occasional hot flushes, a great tightness of the chest and pain, so much so, that every one thought it was consumption. Having heard of the great cures performed by Dr. Von Eisenberg, I consulted him with but little hope of a cure. I am now happy to be enabled to add my testimonial to the great number already in the Doctor's possession, as to his scientific and successful mode of treatment, as he has shown in my case that skill and knowledge which have procured for him so great a reputation. I am so entirely restored to perfect health that I do most sincerely recommend all sufferers from CHRONIC CATARRH and SORE THROAT to apply at once to Dr. Von Eisenberg with a certainty of being cured."

NEW-YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD.

The undersigned stockholders in the New-York Central Railroad, feeling deeply interested in a reform of the management of said Road, respectfully recommend all holders of stock who cannot be themselves present at the ensuing election of Directors, to send their proxies to Thomas W. Olcott, Albany, John E. Williams and George F. Tallman, of New-York, or either of them, to be voted upon by them at that election.

At some time previous to that day a meeting will be called of all the stockholders who may thus send them their proxies, for the nomination of a Board of Directors, or whom their votes will be cast.

The undersigned respectfully suggest that the interest of stockholders will be better secured by thus placing their proxies in the hands of disinterested and well known gentlemen, such as those named above, than by submitting them to the present officers of the Road, to be used in securing their own reelection.

MITCHELL'S GEOGRAPHICAL QUESTIONS.

The publishers of Mitchell's Geographies call the attention of Teachers, School Directors, and others interested in education, to MITCHELL'S NEW SERIES, lately published, with all the adornments and attractions of art, and with all the perfection of copper plate map engraving. These books, enumerated above, are in every particular up to the present date—the Geography of to-day. The publishers also beg to call attention to a few points here stated, and to the commendations following:

1. THE COMPLETENESS OF THE SERIES.—The subject is taken up at the lowest point, beginning with the "First Lessons," intended for young children who have just learned to read, and is carried forward by a regular succession of books, on a uniform plan, as far as it is ever taught as a school study.

2. THE UNIFORMITY OF THE SERIES.—This is secured by carrying through the entire series, in a uniform manner, every change or improvement adopted in any one of the books. The scholar, in passing from a lower book to a higher, has nothing to unlearn. There are no impediments growing out of discrepancies in the maps, or changes in the names and definitions. Whatever is given in one book, if given in another, is presented in the same form and order.

3. THE THOROUGHNESS WITH WHICH THE SERIES IS KEPT UP TO THE TIMES.—Geography is essentially a progressive science. At the present time this is eminently the case. There is hardly a nationality in the world which has not materially changed its boundaries in the last ten years. Scientific and commercial travelers, also, are yearly transferring large regions of the earth's surface from the unknown to the known. The proprietors of Mitchell's Series employ constantly a skillful geographer, with a competent corps of assistants, whose sole business is to keep up the work of continual revision, and to transfer immediately to the maps and to the texts every change required by political revolutions or by the progress of scientific discovery.

4. THE EXTREME BEAUTY AND FINENESS OF THE MAPS.—This was a marked feature of the work when it was first projected. This character, thus clearly impressed upon the work, has been steadily maintained. The maps, in this respect, may safely challenge comparison with those of any School Geographies published in the world. The beautiful delicacy of finish not only makes them more attractive to the eye, but aids the scholar essentially in studying them. Everything is perfectly clear and plain. Even where the maps are most crowded, there is no confusion.

5. THE FRESHNESS AND BEAUTY OF THE PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATIONS.—Instead of the old hackneyed subjects, half fabulous, half distorted, and wholly repulsive, the new series contain elegant pictures, made from original designs, by professional artists, often from photographs taken on the spot, and representing truthfully to the eye scenes and persons of living interest in this present age of the world.

6. THE CARE BESTOWED UPON THE PRONUNCIATION OF THE GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES.—The pronunciation of each geographical name is given in the new series as it occurs in the body of the book. Besides this, at the end of the several volumes are Tables of Pronunci

NOTICE.

To the Stockholders of the New-York and Harlem Railroad Company:

The increasing business of the Company and anticipated connections with other Railroads render it expedient further to extend the double track to Mott's Haven terminus at Williams Bridge on the Hudson River Corners, and to complete the road from that place through to Albany.

For the purpose of meeting the necessary outlays attending such constructions, and to defray the expenses incident to the extensions of the City Railroad already in operation, the Board of Directors have resolved that it is expedient to increase the Capital Stock to such amount, not exceeding the limitation of the Charters, as may be sanctioned by the requisite vote of the Stockholders, and to issue the increased stock from time to time as may be required for the purposes of completing such double track and extensions and procuring the necessary additional rolling stock.

The amount of the Capital Stock, as limited by the charter and amendatory acts, and including both the Common and Preferred Stock is eight millions of dollars, of which two millions one hundred and thirty-nine thousand nine hundred and fifty dollars remained unissued.

The Board of Directors propose that the Capital Stock be increased to its full amount.

A meeting of the Stockholders for the purpose of acting upon such resolution of the Board of Directors and of concurring in the increase of the Capital Stock to the full amount authorized by the Charter and the several acts of the Legislature supplementary thereof, will be held at the Office of the Company, at the corner of 29th-st. and 4th-av., on TUESDAY, the first day of December next, at 12 o'clock noon of that day.

For the purpose of ascertaining the Stockholders who shall be entitled to vote at such meeting, the Books of Transfer will be closed, as required by law, on Saturday, the 7th day of November inst., the day of the first publication of this notice.

The Books will be open on Tuesday, the 10th day of November inst.

Dated, New-York, Nov. 6, 1863.

The sale will be positive. Each lot put up will be sold to the highest bidder for cash, in any form whatever, being made for account of, or on behalf of the Company.

Fifty cents per ton, in bankable funds, to be paid at the time and place of sale, and the balance, in like funds, on receiving the order for the coal, which must be called for within ten days thereafter, and the coal taken away within the 15 days from the day of sale, unless navigation is obstructed by ice, when the party to have an additional thirty days for taking the delivery of their purchases, by making a further deposit of 50 cents per ton within the ten days above specified. Interest, at 7 per cent. per annum, will in each case be charged on the balance, from the time stipulated for payment until paid, and 25 cents per ton to cover the expense of stocking the coal—both for the delivery of coal.

The other conditions of sale will be substantially those hitherto accepted by all purchasers at private contract, of coal deliverable at Elizabethport, so far as applicable. The coal will be delivered direct from the cars on their arrival from the mines when practicable—otherwise from the stock. These conditions will be modified to meet the wants of ocean steamers, whose arrival cannot be definitely fixed.

The room in which previous sales have been held being appropriated to other purposes, attention is called to the fact that the sale now announced will be held at the office of the Company.

A GREAT DISCOVERY.
ANÆSTHETIC NITROUS OXIDE.

Teeth positively extracted without pain, by Dr. HOYT, INVENTOR and sole manufacturer of ANÆSTHETIC NITROUS GAS, (not Laughing Gas,) but a strictly anæsthetic agent, entirely free from exhilarating effects, and perfectly harmless, causing a quiet sleep, with pleasing sensations and perfect insensibility to pain, during which I extract teeth without the knowledge of the patient. Teeth filled, and artificial teeth of every description inserted. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed. Dr. HOYT, Dentist, No. 907 Broadway, near 20th-st.

PRIVATE DISEASES CURED IN THE shortest possible time, by Dr. WARD & CO., No. 50 Lispenard-st., near Broadway, without the use of Mercury, loss of time or change of diet. Dr. WARD, from the hospitals of London, Paris and Edinburgh, is the discoverer of the only certain and reliable remedies for diseases of a private character. In 28 years' practice he has cured more cases of Secret Diseases and Wrong Treatment than all others combined. I can and will cure you in less time and expense than any one can or will, and those who have been robbed of their money and health, call: it will take but little money and time to restore you. If you have been unfortunate, call at once. By his special experience in this much neglected branch of medical science, he is enabled to guarantee a cure in the most complicated cases. Recent cases of Gonorrhœa or Syphis cured in a few days, without change of diet or hindrance from business. Secondary Syphilis—the last vestige eradicated without the use of Mercury. Involuntary emissions stopped in a short time. Sufferers from Impotency, or loss of sexual power, restored to full vigor in a few weeks. Permanently and speedily cured by a new treatment. Persons at a distance failing to receive prompt treatment elsewhere, may get a permanent cure effected by writing a full diagnosis of their case, addressed to Dr. WARD, No. 50 Lispenard-st., the only place. Call, send for a circular, or write.

SURE CURE—BY DR. POWERS, SUCCESSfully consulted with Dr. WARD, No. 50 Lispenard-st. Conducted on the plan of the Hospital des Venériens, Paris, where those afflicted with any form of private disease can receive prompt treatment, without risk or exposure, viz.: Syphilis, gonorrhœa, gleet, strictures, ulcers, tumors, cancers, secondary and constitutional syphilis, diseases of the kidneys, &c., &c. Thirty years of extensive practice, exclusively devoted to the treatment of these complaints, enables us to effect cures in cases where others of less experience have failed. Dr. Powers' Essence of Life restores the vigor of youth in four weeks. This marvelous agent reaches the most obstinate constitution—physical disqualifications, impediments to marriage, thereby speedily cured. The men to consult, Drs. Ward and Powers, the champions and kings of venereal diseases, possessing the most certain, speedy and only effectual remedies in the world, guarantee a perfect cure, in no charges, in one to three days. Established in 1850. Those who have been deceived elsewhere are never without. Send for a circular. To Ladies.—Dr. Powers' Periodical Drops are a safe and certain remedy for monthly irregularities. The above remedies sent by mail. The afflicted should read their circular. Postage free, on receipt of a stamp. Cures warranted.

VAN AMBURGH & CO., in calling attention of the public to this, the most
building ever constructed, beg leave to state that they are now enabled to present to the citizens of New-York, in unexampled splendor, a zoological building in keeping with the enterprising spirit of the great Americann public. The above-named premises have been completely rebuilt, remodeled and reconstructed, decorated carved, embellished and ornamented, so as to adapt them for an exhibition of Zoological Wonders, and arranged in a style of
GRANDEUR AND GORGEOUS MAGNIFICENCE
unequaled by any building for zoological purposes in the known world. Even the far-famed GOVERNMENT ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS
of Europe, upon which hundreds of thousands of dollars are spent annually, fail to present such a grand and beautiful view as the visitor beholds on entering this PALACE OF ZOOLOGICAL WONDERS, so constructed that from the most remote portions of the immense galleries can be seen at one glance nearly all the myriads of animals and birds there congregated, and, at the same time, view the splendid performances in the lower portion of the
EXCELSIOR ZOOLOGICAL BUILDING OF THE WORLD.

The New-York public, especially the rising generation, have long felt the necessity of a first-class exhibition of this kind, where instruction and amusement are harmoniously blended in one, and where natural history could be studied from the living animals themselves.

THE GREAT STUDY OF NATURAL HISTORY
is capable of yielding innumerable subjects for both moral and religious study. Its chief tendency ought to be, to lead us from the admiration of the works to the contemplation of their Author, to teach us to look through Nature up to Nature's God, a knowledge by which he ennobles in the conviction, the knowledge, and the adoration of that Mercyful Being, to whose goodness alone we are indebted for every happiness that we enjoy. VAN AMBURGH & CO., with a laud

REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER'S SPEECH

the common people of Great Britain. [Applause.] The result has been that the Government has more and more modified its policy until it now came to that condition in which, I believe, we may in the main feel satisfied. England has determined that ships of war shall not be sent out from her ports to harass our commerce and drive it from the sea. The language of Lord JOHN RUSSELL in his statement of the policy of the British Government in the future, has met with some few dissentient voices, but it has met with the approbation of the great mass of the British people, and the Government will unquestionably maintain for the future that policy which they now stand upon. [Applause.] Then there is a growing enlightened sympathy in our favor, also, throughout the realm. There are more public men, more public lecturers and more public meetings influencing opinion in our favor than ever before. And when men say to you that they doubt this English feeling, I always bring it to fact to them—that the English Parliament, as it is now known to be adverse to the North, dare not vote against the North for fear of their own people. I allege this additional fact that out of some four or five hundred public meetings that have been held in Great Britain not more than twelve or fifteen of them carried resolutions against the North—that out of eight or ten public meeting held in Liverpool, there has not been one that has been carried against the North. And that at the great meeting which it was my privilege to attend there, [laughter,] the vote was five to one in favor of the North. [The noise and tumult with which it was conducted would have given one an expectation of a very different result, but when it came to vote, there was but one in five against us, and the men who were there for peace and quietness were four out of five for us. I hold in my hand a letter from RICHARD COBDEN. [Tremendous applause.] He says: "You will carry back an intimate acquaintance with a state of feeling in this country among what, for a better name, I call the ruling class. Their sympathy is undoubtedly strongly for the South, with the instinctive satisfaction at the prospect of the disruption of the great Republic. It is natural enough. But do not forget that we have in this case, for the first time in our history, seen the masses of the British people taking sides for a foreign Government against its rebellious citizens. [Tremendous applause.] In every other instance whether in the case of the Poles, Italians, Hungarians and Corsecans, Greeks or South Americans, the popular sympathy of this country has always leaned to the side of the insurgents the moment the rebellion has broken out. In the present case our masses have an instinctive feeling that their cause is bound up in the prosperity of the States—the United States. It is true that they have not a particle of power in the direct form of a vote, but when millions in this country are led by the religious middle class they can go and prevent the governing class from pursuing a policy hostile to their sympathies. [Tremendous applause.]

Under these circumstances, I think you will agree with me that we may consider the great middle laboring class of England is on the side of the North, and the upper class, as they are called, are on the side of the South. I put no immoderate estimate on my services. I believe I did some good when I ever I spoke. [Applause.] But it should be remembered that a single man, a stranger in the community, would be eaten up by vanity if he said he supposed that he had done all the good that had been accomplished. There must have been preparation. He merely came to touch the train that had already been laid. When, in October, you go to the tree and give it a jar, and the fruit come down all around you, it is not you that ripens it? A whole Summer has been doing that. You merely brought down the fruit prepared. It was my happy fortune to be there to jar the tree. The fruit that fell was not of my ripening. It was supposed by many that I formed an unwarrantable element of the service in the fruits of it. But my accustomed modesty will stand by me yet. [Applause.] I saw in a letter in the NEW-YORK TIMES of yesterday a friendly hand from England write: "The sympathy of England was never stronger for the South, her hatred never so bitter for the North. If Mr. BROUGHAM thinks otherwise, he has been deceived by the crowd of abolition partisans gathered about him." And then he makes some personal allusions, which I won't read. "I cannot now remember," he says, "the name of one distinguished and really influential person who gave him countenance and support." Fact. "He was surrounded by dissenting ministers, and members of the Emancipation Society." Pretty nearly so. "The nobility, the clergy, and the established Church, and members of Parliament, were wanting." Yes, they were. "BROUGHAM, WILBERFORCE, BUXTON—the great names identified with the Anti-Slavery cause in England, were opposed to him, as they are opposed to the cause he advocated." I will admit that there were no Broughams, no Wilberforces, and no Buxtons in the audiences that I addressed, and the reason was that there are not any such men in England. [Applause and laughter.] The stock has died out. [Laughter.] But there is other good stock yet left. There is something that they call Lord BROUGHAM left. Is it not glorious old HENRY BROUGHAM?—it is Lord BROUGHAM. [Laughter.] There is the name of WILBERFORCE, for the sake of the father, still yet courteously honored in the son. There is a BUXTON—the name—[laughter]—and it is perfectly true that if England is to be judged by her nobility—or her nobility—by her merely eminent names England is not with us. But if England is to be judged by her middle class—if you please to say it, by her influential classes, she is with us. [Applause.] At any rate, I am not deceived, or I have no reason to be deceived, as the writer in the Times supposes. And now let me remind you that the Government and others—and particularly the Government—are in favor of the Federal cause.

A few words of the Government known to fame, and the order I cause are the following: The Duke of ARGYLE, (who married a daughter of the Duchess of Sutherland,) Lord Granville, Right Hon. Charles Wm. Wilson, Mr. Milner Gibson, Mr. Jas. Stansfeld, Sir Charles Gibson: Members of Parliament. Mr. John Bright—[cheers:]—I told him it would be just so. Richard Cobden. [cheers.] You know your friends, I see—W. E. Forster, less known, but just as firm and sturdy a friend; E. A. Leatham, Guthrie Ogilvie, James White, P. A. Taylor, F. Harrison, W. Williams and The O'Donoghue, Esqrs. Thomas Barnes, W. E. Baxter, James Cairn, Samuel Gurney, George Hadfield, Grant Duff, James Kershaw, Wilford Lawson. Among the newspapers and magazines favorable to our cause are the following: The Morning Star—the organ of the advanced Liberal party—managing proprietor and editor, Mr. Samuel Lucas; the Daily News, another Liberal organ, edited by Mr. Walker, a paper which, if a man wants to take the Times, without its venom and wickedness, he can take. It is just as able as the Times and a thousand times more principled. The evening editions of the above journals are respectively named the Evening Star and the Express, (a queer name!) The Spectator—weekly—edited by Mr. Hutton one of the oldest and most influential of the weeklies and distinguished by its sound and philosophical tone; Lloyd's Weekly News, edited by HENNIKER JERRAID, with a circulation of 400,000 weekly, the great cheap journal of the working classes; the Beehive, organ of the Trades Union, the non-conformists, (all sorts of dissenters;) the British Standard, Dr. CAMPBELL, Congregationalist; the Freeman, Baptist, MACMILLAN'S magazine, edited by Prof. MASSON, of Cambridge University; the Dial, weekly journal of the Morning Star; the British Ensign, (Congregationalist;) the Westminster Review, the quarterly organ of English Parliament; the Observer, the ministerial organ; the Reader, one of our principal literary journals. The most popular and widely-circulated journals, in both the metropolis and the country, support the Northern cause. The aggregate circulation is at least a million each issue. Among the leading provincial papers may be mentioned the following: The Manchester Examiner, circulating through the manufacturing districts; the Newcastle Chronicle; Liverpool Daily Post, Leeds Mercury, Preston Guardian, Dundee Advertiser, Caledonian Mercury, Edinburgh; Northern Daily Whig, Belfast; Carlisle Examiner, Kendall Mercury, and the paper of Lake District; Hampshire Independent, Southampton; Bradford Advertiser, in which Personet Thompson writes weekly; Bedford Mercury; The Irishman, an organ of the Meagher and O'Brien party in Ireland; and the Bucks Advertiser. Among men distinguished in science and literature are the following: Lord Carlisle, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; Lord Houghton, better known as Moncton Milnes, author and poet, [applause;] Sir Charles Lyell, the eminent geologist, [applause;] John Stuart Mill, the greatest of England's philosophers of the present day, [tremendous applause;] Sir Stephen Lushington, Judge of the Admiralty Court, and one of the great leaders in the English struggle against Slavery and the Slave trade; [applause;] Goldwin Smith, Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford; [applause;] Prof. Cairnes, Professor of Political Economy in Belfast University, Prof. F. W. Newman, the eminent Professor of Latin and English literature; Gen. Perritt Thompson, the founder of the Westminster Review, first Governor of Sierra Lenone, and author of the Anti-Corn Law Catechism [applause;] Dr. Chapman, editor of the Westminster Review; Mr. Thos. Hughes, author of Tom Brown's School Days, the most popular work in England next to Uncle Tom's Cabin [applause;] Mr. Edward Miall, leader of the English Non-conformists; George Wilson, Chairman of the Anti-Corn Law League; George Thompson, fellow-laborer with Wilberforce, Clarkson and Brougham, in their Anti-Slavery struggles; Prof. Nichols, of Glasgow University; Dr. Foster, Chairman of the Religious Liberation Society; Prof. Beesly, Professor of Political Economy in University Hall; James Taylor, Jr., founder of the freehold land movement; Dr. Lees, the eminent temperance lecturer; W. J. Fox, the late Member for Oldham; Washington Wilks and Henry Vincent, well known as popular leaders or writers; Mr. Scott, the Chamberlain of London; the Mayors of Manchester, Birmingham, Rochdale and Faversham, clergymen and ministers are as follows: Dr. French, Dean of Westminster; Dr. Candlish and Dr. Guthrie, the leaders of the Free Church in Scotland; Hon. and Rev. Belfast Noel; Rev. Newman Hall; Rev. Wm. Brock; Rev. Dr. Halley, President of New-College; Rev. Dr. Angus, President of Regent's Park College; Rev. Dr. John Cairns, Berwick-on-Tweed; Rev. Dr. James Begg, Edinburgh; Rev. Dr. Lindsay Alexander, Edinburgh; Rev. Canon Robinson, of York Cathedral; Rev. Prof. Maurie, of London; Rev. Geo. Gilfillan, of Dundee; Rev. Dr. Anderson, of Glasgow; Rev. Dr. Campbell, of London; Rev. Dr. Hamilton, of London; Rev. W. Batchelor, of Glasgow. These are only a few of thousands of names of men who are our friends, but they are better known, and have signalized their friendship by literary services in the cause of the North. I ask you, fellow-citizens, whether upon the facts that I have stated, there is not reason to believe that after all we have been all misinformed, and that there is a great undertone in England of friendliness and of fidelity to us and to our cause. [Applause.] I will not attempt to represent the grounds which I took in England. I merely wish now to add to this statement of facts respecting that country a few words why we should seek by all honorable means to maintain sympathetical and peaceful relations with England. This is not our own struggle—it is the world's battle that we are fighting. We are set to do the work, and the whole world is to get the fruit of our victories. We are struggling for the rights of the common people—[applause]—and not of this country, but of the world. [Great applause.] Therefore we ought not to ignore the common people of any nation, and still less of that nation from which we sprang, and whose language we still speak—I sometimes think with more purity than they themselves. And if that great underlying population of England that is struggling for intelligence and larger political rights—if that great under-class are on our side, for their sake we ought to be at peace with England, and to avoid every cause of offence. For their sake who are our friends, let us be patient and reach out cordial hands of grasping for England—toward those who are our friends at the top, then toward those who are our friends, and who have signalized their friendship through famine, and hunger, and sickness, and suffering, and stood witnout betraying their fidelity—for, to this hour, Lancashire and her starving weavers are fast and firm friends of the North. [Applause.] We are laboring on this side for just those things for which the generous, and the just, and the enlightened men of Europe are laboring on their side. They have just these same internal difficulties that we have. We have felt how we were checked by the power of self, by perverse prejudices of classes, by aristocracies established in this country or forming, and we have found that if we attempted to move even in the North we moved against impediments in our own midst; and a part of the battle that we have fought has been a moral battle, an intellectual battle at home, and they who are our friends experience the same difficulties abroad; and we are to take into consideration their difficulties, and not to be impatient for their hindrances and lets which make them fail to come up to the measure which we desire and which we should prescribe for them. And, more than that, it seems to me that in patience, and generosity, and magnanimity, it behooves us to set an example to the nations of the world. We have a better Government, we think, than any other nation, and let us prove it by the fruit that it brings forth in the citizen.

It has pleased Lord BROUGHAM—who is not, I think, any longer responsible for what he says—to say that the American people are a mob. Let it be ours to show that an American mob is more decent than a British aristocracy. [Tremendous applause.] We are proud of our common schools; we are proud of our citizens they make. Let it not be pride and mere vanity on our parts, but in all the attributes of fidelity to our conviction at home, patience with our enemies abroad, let us show to the world one more thing: that while, with free institutions, a self-governing people can acquire wealth from the bosom of the earth, as no other ever did, and while they can maintain a government more cheaply and more fairly than any other—while they have power to put down foreign enemies and subdue the most terrific intestine foes that ever afflicted and tormented a people—while we are exhibiting that, let us also show to the world that under crowns or coronet, nor under any educated influence, is there another class of people on the globe that are so temperate, so self-restraining, so just and so generous in their sentiments toward foreign people as the great mass of the common citizens of America. [Applause.] The day is coming when nations are to feel each other's hearts more nearly—when more and more themes for national discussion are to be those that turn upon the moral sentiments—those that are allied to common ideas and common feelings—for we need no other. We do not need Great Britain for any material reasons. For moral reasons we need her. And I say more than that—for moral reasons she needs us. For the sake of man, and for the cause of God—for the hope of civilization, these two nations of the earth, carrying a civilization which is derived from and which carries with it the common people, and thus are uplifted in civilization—these two great Protestant Christian nations all foroid that we should ever cross hands in strife and struggle. But while other nations are beginning, though with slow steps, to look to the rising sun; while even in Russia her frosts begin to glitter in that light that ere long shall melt them, let not these foremost of nations that have stood in witness for liberty, and all other blessings of free Government, fall out by the way; but shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, bearing and forbearing with each other, loving, or hoping to love by and by, let them stand together, to bear out to every part of the earth the influence of Christian civilization and human liberty. [Great and long-continued applause.]

At the conclusion of Mr. BEECHER'S address, the following resolutions were read, and proposed for adoption:

Resolved, first. That we hail with joy the return of our honored and beloved townsman, Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER, to this city, for sixteen years his cherished home, and the scene of his humble and Christian labors that we are grateful for the goodness which has guarded and prospered him, and has brought him back with renovated strength for the work here by Providence intrusted to his hands.

Resolved, secondly. That, as American citizens, we recognize the great service he has rendered to our National cause at home, in consolidating public opinion, creating prejudice, and rallying to our aid the influential sympathies of the great middle-class in English society, and in giving the vast audiences which heard his lucid and eloquent addresses a clear and just view of the causes of the struggle that now agitates our land, of the methods and instruments employed by our Government in its conduct of this terrible struggle, and of the results to be realized through it for the cause of free Government and of popular institutions throughout the world.

Resolved, thirdly. That having inherited, in great part, their language, their religion, their liberties, and their laws, as well as their blood, from English ancestors, and being now engaged in a contest for the maintenance of those liberties, the preservation of those laws, and the advance of that ever-widening religion against a rebellion which ostentatiously founds itself on human Slavery, and makes the indefinite propagation of that Slavery its motive and its end, the people of these United States have a right to demand, as they do demand, of the English Government and the English people, that they shall regard us with a generous sympathy, and shall maintain toward us in public affairs an attitude at the least of impartial neutrality.

Resolved, finally. That while, if the National honor should demand it, the resources of the nation, both of money and of men, would be all freely pledged to the use of the Government in a war with Great Britain, for the protection of our commerce, the vindication of our rights or the maintenance and defence of our National integrity, we shall, in common with all the citizens of our loyal States, most deprecate such a war as a peril and a calamity only less than those involved in the success of the rebellion; that we earnestly desire peace with Great Britain—a friendly competition in arts, in letters, in social progress, in humane enterprises, in Christian endeavors for the redemption of the world, but never a violent collision in arms; and that we believe that in the moral union of these nations, and their allied and sympathetic effort for the furtherance of the highest interests of mankind, lies, under God, the best promise of the present, the best and grandest hope of the future.

These were adopted by a hearty and unanimous "Aye," when Dr. STORRS having remarked that "no one spoke after the King," the assembly dispersed, to all appearances highly delighted with what they had seen and heard.

The Riot Ringleader, Andrews.

The notorious ANDREWS, one of the ringleaders in the July riots, who was taken charge of by the General Government and has been lodging at Fort Lafayette, has been handed over for trial to the State authorities. An order to that effect has been made by Maj.-Gen. DIX, and executed by Marshal MURRAY.
